Democracy is dead<

You're a bit too pessimistic, IMO. I agree the two parties currently have a stranglehold on the power structure, and have frozen out a lot of good ideas, but locally I see good things (and admittedly a few stupid things too) happen as a result of direct democracy, a.k.a. initiative and referendum, and even elected officials (I believe we both share the SF Bay Area as home, so you probably know many of the same things I do). Not only that, but the original reasons for democracy still hold strong sway here, things like personal initiative and creativity, insofar as the public has been able to avoid being dumbed down to the point of oblivion and inability (which I think probably constitutes a bigger problem in the long term - I don't relish the idea of idiots becoming the leaders of tomorrow, and there are many examples of this at all levels from which to learn right now).

I suggest you examine a place where there are no elections and no opportunity to select any choice at all, where democracy truly has been utterly suppressed, and see how the folks there fare. If you can come back with verifiable glowing reports of peace, prosperity and happiness from those climes, I will reconsider your relatively hopeless position.

Dumb people voting is scary, too. The reason we have excellent public schools and a vigorous free press is because these things are essential to democracy working.

If the schools became mediocre and the media just became mouthpieces for big business we'd be in a lot of trouble.

Rehnquist dissented from the majority on Kelo vs New London.

Justices Stevens, Kennedy, Souter, Breyer, and Ginsburg were the ones who voted to allow government to take property by eminent domain to resell to private interests.

It'll be easier to remember who voted how if you realize the decision increased the power of government, and promoted the collection of higher taxes.

the end of a piece of lath six inches to a foot long, attach a cord through the hole and whirl it around your head. It's called a

KATRINA SCAMS EMERGE
Wed Sep 07 2005 17:40:55 ET

Even as Americans rally to make donations to the victims of Hurricane Katrina, the Internet is brimming with scams, come-ons and opportunistic pandering related to the relief effort in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama -- and in greater numbers and varieties than any past disaster, according to Thursday editions of the NEW YORK TIMES .

Florida's attorney general has already filed a lawsuit against a man who mounted one of the earliest networks of Web sites -- katrinahelp.com, katrinadonations.com and others -- which purported to collect donations for victims of the storm.

In Missouri, a much wider constellation of Internet domains -- with names like parishdonations.com and katrinafamilies.com -- displays pictures of the flood-ravaged south and drives traffic to a single site, InternetDonations.org, a nonprofit entity with apparent links to a white supremacist group.

My electric power went out last Monday last week at 11:42 PM.My doggy and I sat in my kitchen listening to my radio and sitting on ready (she wasen't scared though,I was scared s...less!,sleeping by my feet and sometimes rounding up some of her rubber squeaky doggy toys,[come on old fart Larry boy,let's play football!,she can say my Larry name,believe it or not] to dive under the kitchen table if the tree in my front yard fell over on my house.Last Tuesday,last week,I was mopeing around in my house and lying on my couch watching my little battery powered color tv set that I had connected to a big Sears 12 volt marine deep cycle battery and at 4:22 PM my electric power came back on and I got up and plugged my tv set and my webtv box back in that I use with my webtv and my other tv set sitting next to that tv set that I use with my DirecTV and I got back in this news group.I only lost about ten shingles off the top of my house.I realize how lucky I am that I survived Hurricane Katrina.Businesses are opening back up in New Orleans area,according to WWL 870 New Orleans.

A messenger arrived at Ft. Mason at 6:30 a.m. with orders from Gen.
Funston to send all available troops to report to the mayor at the Hall of Justice.

First army troops from Fort Mason reported to Mayor Schmitz at the Hall of Justice around 7 a.m.

At 8 a.m., the 10th, 29th, 38th, 66th, 67th, 70th and 105th Companies of Coast Artillery, Troops I and K of the 14th Cavalry and the First, Ninth and 24th Batteries of Field Artillery arrived Downtown to take up patrol.

Seventy-five soldiers from Companies C and D, Engineer Corps were assigned to the Financial District at 8 a.m., and another 75 along Market from Third Street to the City Hall at Grove and Larkin streets.

A major aftershock struck at 8:14 a.m., and caused the collapse of many damaged buildings. There was much panic.

Second day session of the Grand Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons of the state of California fifty-second annual convocation. The group met after the earthquake but evacuated before the temple at Montgomery and Post streets was destroyed by fire. The Masons listed the date as April 18, A.I. 2436, A.D.

At 10 a.m. Headquarters and First Battalion 22nd Infantry, were brought from Ft. McDowell by boat, and were held for a time in reserve at Oï¿½Farrell St. They were later utilized as patrols and to assist the fire department.

At about 10:05 a.m. the DeForest Wireless Telegraph Station at San Diego radioed press reports of the disaster at San Francisco to the ï¿½U.S.S. Chicago.ï¿½ Admiral Caspar Goodrich immediately ordered fires started under all boilers, and after a confirmation message from the Mayor of San Diego, the ï¿½Chicagoï¿½ steamed at full speed for San Francisco. It was the first time wireless telegraphy was used in a major natural disaster.

< Snip >

This is a different approach to impedance matching one, which I became aware of only a couple of years ago. These types of UNUNS and BALUNS are non DC isolating choke types instead of the more familiar voltage type of transformer. The main advantages are very broad band response and high efficiency. Generally this approach is the one to use except for very long wire antennas like a beverage where you would want that isolation. You may not want to consider this type of transformer on a voltage sensitive antenna of any type because it will not offer any kind of static protection. This type would be the safest to use with a loop type antenna as an example where the antenna is DC grounded.

Yes this was a big one with a R4 level radio blackout on the day lit side of the earth when it occurred.

Looks like there will be more to come in the near future according to this... <http://www.sec.noaa.gov/advisories/bulletins.html>

If you were actually listening during the event you may have had your

G'day,

Social Security in the US means something different from here. Their Social Security is financed by individual and employer contributions. In Australia it all comes from general revenue.

Also some schemes we have the Commonwealth government do are done by the State governments in America.

Our system has actually taken some ideas from them. Our current "work for the dole" system is a version of their workfare.
On the other hand we have had the superannuation gurantee for years , they are still debating Social Security privitisation.

Incidently their unemployment level is about the same as ours.

wouldn't you expect to find even more extremes in misc.survivalism? I haven't been there, but from the few survivalists I know, I can't believe a newsgroup full of them would be a lot of fun.

Second, what exactly were you thinking doing any of this from your work address? Many employers would dump you just for using their systems for this kind of activity, even without the trouble you brought to their servers. I suspect they'd maybe overlook low volume personal email to your family (as in "I'll be home late tonight").

But posting to usenet with your work address to numerous groups is just looking for trouble -- spam at the very least (I worked for someone who got only 200 legit out of 2200 messages after a two-week vacation and most of it was porn spam) and exactly your problem at worst.

In any case, I wish you the best of luck in evading this wacko.

VP,
If I were going to buy either of these Sony Radios it would be the newer Sony ICF-SW07.
But IMHO both the Sony ICF-SW07 and the Sony ICF-SW100 are novelty "Toy" Size Radios that are not for real Long Term Radio Listening and both are too difficult to use with my tired old eyes and big old fingers. PS - Micro does not impress me in a Radio when it comes to the Human Interface and simple ergonomics.

Alas, the SW07 is also more expensive and larger.

What's nonsense? It's simply descriptive. I guess the 'new hobbyist' should try to 'learn' something. I know, 'learning' is a novel concept for some folks, but give it a try!

For the longest time I watched him every day after school! It's a very nice memory. I'm glad his family was with him and that he got to spend his last moments in such a nice place. (North Carolina is one of my favorite places.)

Bush has already said he is initiating an investigation and the senate is also. It's not likely the chief executive will find any fault with his leadership ("Hell, I was on vacation!"), will probably exonerate his high level lackeys, then quietly promote them to less responsible duties after the spotlight dims. Hopefully, lessons will be learned and this whole emergency management thing can be streamlined. Critics may be right in suggesting that FEMA should be separate from homeland security, with a cabinet-level director of its own.

Hey jd, I see criticism coming from the right as well as the left. What's

The guy is a lightweight figurehead and not much more. If Bush wanted someone to go in and really organize the effort and do the job of evacuation that inept N.O. mayor failed to do then he would have selected a military commander with the credentials and bearing of a Norman Schwarzkopf. Bush decided that P.R. and keeping the locals quiet was better than actually running a huge evacuation and cleanup correctly.

Yes, he was a fine actor that I remember as Maynard G. Krebs in Dobie Gillis more than as Gilligan. The Gillis show had quite a cast of good actors. Denver could never really shake the Gilligan stereotype, although the show only ran for what 3 seasons? Anyway, he was a fine actor and will be missed..

I would give serious consideration to the latest Sony 7600 instead.
You will get at least the same performance for a much much lower price.

The 07 has a unique memory system "Station Call Tuning" which could certainly be useful, but it relies on ROM chips that become outdated and have to be replaced for a fee. If minimizing receiver size is the most important criteria then the pricey 07 could fill that requirement.

There are other small size receivers available that perform quite well for even less money than the Sony 7600. The diminutive Degen/ Kaito DE1102 offers very good SW/MW/FM performance in a very small package. The slightly larger but still quite compact DE1103 is probably the best performing receiver priced well under $100.00.

To be perfectly honest receivers like the SW100S and SW07 usually generate an initial "golly how'd they make it so small" response. But once the newness wears off such tiny feature-laden radios can be tiring to use. Radios like the SW07 would sell well at places like Sharper Image and Hammacher Schlemmer where price and performance are secondary to the gee-whiz factor.

the administration's own homeland security response plan, which directed the federal government to act on its own authority to quickly provide assistance and conduct emergency operations following a major catastrophe, pre-empting state and local authorities if necessary. According to DHS' December 2004 National Response Plan (NRP), "catastrophic events," such as what occurred in New Orleans, call for heightened and "proactive" federal involvement to manage the disaster. The response plan listed "guiding principles" to govern the response to these major events. The "Guiding Principles for Proactive Federal Response" make clear that, in these "catastrophic" cases, the federal government will operate independently to provide assistance, rather than simply supporting or cajoling state authorities:

The primary mission is to save lives; protect critical infrastructure, property, and the environment; contain the event; and preserve national security.
Standard procedures regarding requests for assistance may be expedited or, under extreme circumstances, suspended in the immediate aftermath of an event of catastrophic magnitude.
Identified Federal response resources will deploy and begin necessary operations as required to commence life-safety activities.
Notification and full coordination with States will occur, but the coordination process must not delay or impede the rapid deployment and use of critical resources. States are urged to notify and coordinate with local governments regarding a proactive Federal response.
State and local governments are encouraged to conduct collaborative planning with the Federal Government as a part of "steady-state" preparedness for catastrophic incidents."
The NRP also says that, when responding to a catastrophic incident, the federal government should start emergency operations even in the absence of clear assessment of the situation. "A detailed and credible common operating picture may not be achievable for 24 to 48 hours (or longer) after the incident," the NRP's "Catastrophic Annex" states. "As a result, response activities must begin without the benefit of a detailed or complete situation and critical needs assessment."

A September 5 Los Angeles Times article quoted former FEMA chief of staff Jane Bullock saying that "[t]he moment the president declared a federal disaster [on Aug 29], it became a federal responsibility. ... The federal government took ownership over the response." Moreover, DHS' own website declares that DHS "will assume primary responsibility on March 1st [2005] for ensuring that emergency response professionals are prepared for any situation. This will entail providing a coordinated, comprehensive federal response to any large-scale crisis and mounting a swift and effective recovery effort."

There were several breaches, many more than the three big ones.
According to an article in the WSJ there were apparently a series of rather large waves that overflowed the levee tops and caused the breakdown.

Even if New Orleans rebuilds the levees and makes them taller the city faces a far more fundamental problem. It is sinking. Previously it sank at about the rate of 2 feet per century howver that rate is expected to increase to over 3 feet. The city sits on a river silt and that deep base (over 1000 feet?) continues to compact partly because the river was redirected and silt replacement no longer occurs. The rate of subsidence is also being relatively increased by rising ocean levels. It is expected that the storm will also increase the rate of silt compaction.

At some point the experts have to ask the tough questions: Does it make sense to rebuild the residential portions of New Orleans. Are they really fit places for long term human habitation. I don't think they are.

I agree in general, except for the fact that a dipole has a characteristic directionality, whereas a random wire significantly shorter than the wavelength will be omnidirectional. I suspect that there will be occasional times when this factor matters.

When it doesn't matter, a random wire is still a more versatile antenna than a single-lambda dipole, even when untuned.

I have an Alpha-Delta DXUltra, which is basically a multi-lambda dipole, and a 60-foot random wire through a transformer at 20 feet elevation above ground. Noise levels aside, there is little I can hear on the DXUltra that doesn't appear on the wire, and quite a bit on the wire, especially at freqs < 6 MHz, that is inaudible on the DXUltra (even though the DXUltra supposedly is good down to 120 meters - this loss of signal may be a function of inadequate height, since the antenna center is only 27 feet sloping to 7 feet at either end).

I agree. Most of us will fill memories on a radio with the frequencies and band cutoffs we find useful. I assume the target audience for that radio is a well off person who travels a lot and like gedgets. Unless that person has the technical acumen to both wade through a large owners manual to figure out the commands and keep the ROM up to date, I think it will probably turn into an expensive lightly used AM/FM receiver.

I think ROM updates are a needlessly expensive and outdated way to update consumer products in general and radio memories in particular. At the time it was designed they should have included a serial port for downloading updates or if it was designed recently a USB connector.

Right, well, the "shadow people" can certainly be characterized as "phoney baloney crap". But at times uninformed individuals are at a loss as to how to explain hallucinatory episodes or the sensing of what seems a malevolent presence during episodes of sleep paralysis. A fair number of folks have explained away such experiences as alien abduction, presence of demons, etc. Art Bell aids in the perpetuation of such bogus explanations.

If you will back track far enough in this news group thingy,you will see where I said (in effect) that there will be a time when New Orleans will seriously have to think about rebuilding further North on higher and dry land.

I do find that the dipole is wonderful on 7 MHz, and 11 MHz and up. On 9 and 6 it's about a toss-up, and on down through the tropicals the wire is better.

My big problem is noise, especially on the lower bands. I have an MFJ noise cancelling unit that works with the two antennas, but I think two simpel wires phased would work rather better. If I can arrange such an array that can be set up on my smallish property, I will let folks know. Meanwhile, I still have a large horizontal loop to build around my fence...

Where there is are clearly defined problems that won't go away I agree.
But lets take the risky localities one at a time. In New Orleans there are several problems that I don't see an easy resolution for:

Built below water level
Surrounded by water
In an area frequented by hurricanes
Continues to sink further below water level
Ocean level rising
Water supply is polluted for many years
A population that can't or won't get itself out of harms way

I've been flooded in the past, and had to change email accounts. This was at work also, but I own business so no boss to complain to me. The ISP was kind enough to simply filtre out the garbage and make the transition through a redirection. The flooder was in Panama. I would suggest never posting your email address on a NG after this experience.

20 oil rigs missing in Gulf of Mexico

By Jitendra Joshi in Washington
Thursday, 01 September , 2005, 09:27
At least 20 oil rigs and platforms are missing in the Gulf of Mexico and a ruptured gas pipeline is on fire after Hurricane Katrina tore through the region, a US Coast Guard official said on Wednesday.

"We have confirmed at least 20 rigs or platforms missing, either sunk or adrift, and one confirmed fire where a rig was," Petty Officer Robert Reed of the Louisiana Coast Guard told AFP. View pics: What hurricane Katrina

http://today.reuters.com/business/newsarticle.aspx?type=reutersEdge&storyID=2005-09-08T195323Z_01_EIC871507_RTRIDST_0_PICKS-ENERGY-KATRINA-RECOVERY-DC.XML

The U.S. Coast Guard reported this week that nearly 60 platforms were lost, tilting, drifting or sunk.
Meanwhile, Shell Oil (RDSa.L: Quote, Profile, Research), BP (BP.L:
Quote, Profile, Research) and Marathon (MRO.N: Quote, Profile, Research) all reported major damage to offshore installations.

On the coast, five of the eight refineries completely shut by Katrina remained out of service Thursday and the Department of Energy said four of them -- accounting for 5 percent of U.S. refining capacity -- could remain shut for months.

There was an article in a local newspaper about a 50 man canadian search/rescue team that saved american lives. This voluntary team at their own expense came to mississippi & saved many lives at a parish. They arrived days before the U.S. national guard & Fema. They also did a house to house search for survivors. I'm an american like the majority of posters here but have never nor will i ever be a canada basher! I'll probably get flamed by the canada haters but i just wanted to speak my peace.

You appear to have unintentionally asked two questions here.

First, you might want to address Greg and ask him to elaborate on his "criticism coming from the right" statement.

I take it as a reference to the polls dropping like Cuhulin's proverbial rock...(well, actually record lows to quote today's Wall

I was just made the recipient of a B600, with the 6A41 chassis. It's in great shape, and as it was a gift from dear friends, you can imagine my joy. I want to fire it up, but I don't want to burn out anything. Any tips for first juice? I don't have any special equipment beyond a multimeter. Also, it appears that either there is some odd factory option (I doubt) or a mod made to add an additional speaker. Has a jack that is mounted to the side and a pot inside the box. It was nicely done if aftermarket, but does anyone know if this could be an original option? Thanks for the help.

It ain't Bush. It's the whole corrupt gang who have been systematically dismantling this once-great country since WW2. The people Eisenhower warned us about in 1961.

Glen Ford and Marty McFly were ok.There were some beautifull Canadian wimmins I have seen in some old,old movies before,I don't remember their names though.A few months ago,I saw a website at www.boingboing.net about some old Canadian true detective magazines (mostly the Toronto area) that date back to over fifty years ago.I sent the website to one of my other webtv user names thingy.

You just tend to get a little carried away with your liberal bashing, jd.
I've seen questions being raised, as well as criticism being leveled, about the federal government's response from both sides of the great (unfortunate) political divide. Once the emotion dies down reasonable men will sort it all out, hopefully.

You know what's really remarkable? With all our great technology there is not much reliable communication among local, state, and federal agencies.
Everyone has their own radio system. They ought to all be required to have compatible radios - APCO25 maybe? then they need to establish a chain of command. In Florida last year, all the agencies cooperated really well, AFAIK, after each of the hurricanes. They don't seem to be albe to do that in NOLA.

The hams I'm hearing in the stricken area, mostly on 14.265 and 3.935, are spending long hours relaying emergency and health & welfare messages, but it seems like a slow, ponderous task. I would exspect a lot more action on the local scene on VHF and UHF. In Florida, hams provide a valuable link among all the shelters and the EOC's via VHF as well as HF.

Ah, there it is. Hmmm...I thought it was a Goodwill store in which he pulled off this particular larceny. I've since busted his chops several times for defrauding a charity, and the people helped by that charity. I can see by his original post, though, that he was merely stealing from "a junk store", and so I was mistaken when I accused him in the manner described. cuhulin, I apologize for the false accusation.

Now, if he'd just tell us how he degaussed that TV afterwards.

There are knowledgeable people there, but be careful. There is also

The Red Cross has stated that FEMA has asked them to stay out of N.O., to not bring in either food or water lest anyone be encouraged to stay. Last night about 8:00 pm central a woman called in to WWL from a hospital in the N.O. area. Reception was marginal right then and I missed some details, but she stated that they still have recieved no help or supplies whatsoever from the Red Cross and actually urged people not to contribute to the Red Cross.

First, kudos to Mr. Powell for 'fessing up!

Next, at least so far, the silence from the W sycophants, toadys and general lovers of the war is deafening.

Of course if they comment at all, it won't be to debate the facts but just to call names (and keep their heads in the sand).

On the other hand, Powell's statements are pretty clear, with not very much room to debate:

The assertion that RHF made was that resonance on an antenna is not important on receive and only important on transmit. It is a tried and true technique to cut a dipole for a certain receive frequency. When an dipole antenna is at resonance it will generate a larger voltage from a distant signal on that frequency than other frequencies above and below it for the same reason more power will be radiated from it on transmit. Depending on a number of other factors this alone may or may not allow you to hear a distant station at a level better than the random wire.

The random wire is not omnidirectional and a direction it can pick up a signal well will depend on frequency, its length, distance from the ground and a few other things.

That's just the physics of the statements in question. Now if you want to qualify it with other criteria such as "I can hear the same stuff on a random wire" that is a different story.

Resonance is an important quality in any antenna. The random wire is just called random because you are NOT building it with a particular resonant frequency in mind. A random wire is resonant at some frequency and will perform better at that point just as a dipole or nearly any other antenna as a general rule. There are exceptions of course such as very electrically short antennas designed to be amplified due to the low efficiency. There resonance is not a factor considered in its operation.

A random wire antenna is half an antenna where the other half is ground. For it to work well generally means you need a good outdoor RF ground. This can be a problem itself depending on where you live. A dipole is a full antenna that does not need an RF ground to work properly.

A random wire is a common mode antenna that will do a good job of picking up local electrical noise so the criteria is that you need a good RF ground or radials in its place and you need to live in an electrically quiet area.

If the Alpha-Delta DXUltra is worth the money you paid for it it should work better then a "random wire" at some frequencies. Sometimes the behavior of antennas or circuits is not apparent by only looking at a small selection of frequencies.

An antenna "tailored" for a frequency will pick up more signal energy on that frequency than an antenna of the same type that is not resonant at that frequency.

Thanks for all the help in choosong a radio for my father.
I am going to purchase the 800 satellit millennium.
Only seems to be Universal Radio for 500 bucks selling them.
Any one know where else you can buy cheaper and or is Universal Radio a good place to shop from?
Ebay is not much cheaper for used claimed new units..

Thanks

Ok guys: I got two spools of 22 gauge stranged insulated wire from RShack. And 2" PVC tubing. About 10 feet. Plus a PVC T. I am going to expiriment with this first.

I might order from universal-radio, a dipole insulator and mfj-956 tuner.

Because Rshack only had red wire. Could use black electric tape over the wires? I do not want to lose RF gain!

And what does stranged wire mean?

Telamon - " The assertion that RHF made was that resonance on an antenna is not important on receive and only important on transmit. "
Telamon - Did I in-fact say that ? ? ?
[Please re-read my original posting again.]
AMATEUR (HAM) RADIO VIEW POINT :
If... I were into the Amateur (Ham) Radio process of Two-Way Communications that requires an Antenna for both Transmitting and Receiving : Then a Dipole would be one of the first Antennas that I would consider using. Because as you so ably point out it is a very good antenna to use to Operate on a specific band of frequencies like the Ham Radio Bands. Plus when a Dipole Antenna is properly set-up it is a very good directional antenna for Amateur Radio use.
SHORTWAVE LISTENER (SWL) VIEW POINT :
[The Average Joe Shortwave Listener (SWL) - I have a Radio and want an (One) Antenna to improve what I can Hear without any other gadgets that get-in-the-way of simply Listening to the Radio.]
However, since I am only a Shortwave [Program] Listener (SWL) and I do not listen to a single band of Shortwave Frequencies.
My Focus is on Receive "ONLY" Antennas [.]
* I want to Listen {Hear} to the Entire Shortwave Band and the AM {Medium Wave} Broadcast Band (BCB).
Note - So my Antenna needs are not necessarily well served by a Dipole Antenna.
* My need is to "Listen" {Hear} Everyone; on All Frequencies; in All Directions.
Note - My need is not to Talk and Listen to one individual;
on one frequency; in one direction.
* I want a Single (One) Antenna to cover the Entire Shortwave Band and the AM {Medium Wave} Broadcast Band (BCB). A very broad banded Antenna that 'by-design' will be generally good on all frequencies; but very poor on any specific frequency.
* I want a Single (One) Antenna to receive from All Directions across Shortwave Bands and the AM {Medium Wave} Broadcast Band (BCB).

A very Omni-Directional Antenna that 'by-design' will be generally good in all directions; but very poor on any one direction.
* I want a Single (1) Antenna to reduce all the Man Made Noise (RFI / EMF) that I can Hear all over the AM/MW and Shortwave Radio Bands.

MY CHOICE IS - The Inverted "L" Antenna that uses the Low Noise
Antenna 'design concepts' that were popularized by John Doty.
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/3015
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/2471
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/2016
FWIW - Generally these Shortwave Listener (SWL) Inverted "L" Antenna have a 'Shorter' Vertical-Up-Leg and a 'Longer' Horizontal-Out-Arm :
The Vertical-to-Horizontal (Up-to-Out) Ratio of the Wire Antenna Element is usually 1V:2H or 1V:3H and even 1V:4H.
Note - This Up-to-Out Radio and Numbers are really not important :
But some people need a Set-of-Numbers to "Built-To" to make things work just right in their minds, when they start a project.
Lastly Telamon - For the Shortwave Listener (SWL) seeking that One Single Antenna that is : Broad-Band and Omni-Directional and Low Noise - yes, Yes. YES ! Resonance Is Not Important.

The Drake may very well be the correct choice. I bought mine at the end of run, and have enjoyed it every day since.

Although HF 150 is not a bad choice, either. Certainly hard to find more raw performance in such a small package.

AR-7030+ is a better radio than both of them, but on a performance for the buck basis, the Drake is a far better buy.

I've heard good things about the E1, but nothing that would justify the $500 price tag.

The HF-150 is certainly a good candidate. I can't remember what it last sold for when new, but I don't think it was much more than some of the 'portables' around today! It'd be hard to beat the 150 for sheer value.

I just left my home in NOLA area, and spent two days setting up emergency stations, rigging antennas, etc, \grueling work. Then, there was nothing, 2m repeaters were down, phone lines were dead, HF propagation was almost non-existenet except on 20 Meters, but 160, 80 and 40 was horrible. I tried and tried but no one seemed interested. In all fairness, when cellphone/landline communications stops ham radio grinds to a halt. I don't know if people were in shock or what, but no one wanted to handle any traffic.

When troops moved in, I packed up my stuff and am now on road heading North to Oklahoma. In my opinion ham radio dropped the ball completely, but conditions were HORRIBLE that first week, I never want to have to go through that again. However, as a ham since 1948 I was really disappointed in ham radios non-response.

I think the Sony ICF-7600GR is also a good value for a portable. It's not real expensive and yet it has some neat features.

To be honest, I've never really understood how the 7600GR came to be so reasonably priced. The trend nowadays seems to be to charge tabletop prices for portable performance, and manufacturers will 'justify' the price by tacking lots of bells and whistles onto a radio that's not robust enough to utilize them. I guess someone at Sony was in a generous mood when they priced the 7600GR.

Telamon wrote an excellent discussion, including the following:

>That's just the physics of the statements in question. Now if you want to qualify it with other criteria such as "I can hear the same stuff on a random wire" that is a different story. <

I understand your statement - and I recognize that my earlier blurb about hearing things on the wire vs. the dipole is not strictly speaking a physics statement. It is true, however, and a good deal of that has to do with the frequencies in question and the resonance of the dipole vs. the general coverage capabilities of the wire.

>A random wire is a common mode antenna that will do a good job of picking up local electrical noise so the criteria is that you need a good RF ground or radials in its place and you need to live in an electrically quiet area. <

Absolutely - my problem exactly (at least the second one). I have what I believe to be an excellent ground, in soft moist soil not far from salt water...and it makes a BIG difference to have it hooked up...but it's plenty noisy around these parts.

>If the Alpha-Delta DXUltra is worth the money you paid for it it should work better then a "random wire" at some frequencies. Sometimes the behavior of antennas or circuits is not apparent by only looking at a small selection of frequencies. <

Right - This is exactly what I see, but also the reverse is true - the random wire does better at some freqs - hence my additional quickie discussion about the effective frequency ranges of each antenna. The DXUltra is cut for SW bands, and is theoretically designed to grab most everything down to 2 MHz, but in practical terms it falls off dramatically below about 5 MHz. Again, it may not be high enough, but additional height at this locale would be supremely impractical.

What I truly want to accomplish is to get the noise down at 60m and higher wavelengths - at higher frequencies life is generally quiet enough already.

Of course you're right on this - but you have to admit, there is a plethora of theory (as opposed to fact) and misinformation out there on every topic, SW included, and the multiple names (balun, unun, etc) attached to something as simple as matching transformer do not make it easy for a novice to figure out what the contraption is, especially when some of the names actually apply to other devices for other purposes.

It isn't the equipment or theory that is hard - it is the imprecision with which authoritative people toss around terminology, and once tossed, fail to explain what it means. Some are even haughty and demeaning when asked a question - how helpful is that? A novice can't learn accurately (or satisfactorily) when explanations are in short supply and their questions aren't answered in straightforward (and friendly) terms. It makes no difference whether the information is given by mouth or by written text.

I am sick and tired of you IGNORAIMLESSASSES !!!

You might hate Bush, but get the story straight, and review government 101...you did go to school, right???

And since I risk my ass every day for you clowns back there, I have a right to say what is what when it comes to the President...you losers out there, liberals and religious right types are clueless about the real world around you.

First, Bush contacted the governer twice after NOAA had advised the governer (check her sex and race) that a sea-bound buoy sensor had been hit by a 68 foot (that's right) wave...she had hours to act.

When Bush tried to get her to relinquish control to the federal government, she refused (and did nothing while he could have sent 500 Grey hound buses and the like in there to evacuate the population).

Thereafter the storm devastated New Orleans, when the "BLACK" looted electronic appliances to eat (no power, so what do you call suvival???), Bush again called her to deploy federal troops to protect the city from looters...again she refused (claims she did not want to shoot her beloved citizens-these are citizens???)

His only recourse as no President can usurp the sovereign states, even in this case, was to declare a national emergency...this allowed FEMA to move some assets in, but not all without the governor's permission....they were ready, and placed a call for 3,000 more workers....again, the governor delayed any action.

The state of Louisiana blew it (although they did try late in the game to evacuate these "citizens" and they refused....trying to keep their beloved possessions instead of their loved ones.

Now let's cut cards with the devil, experts.......these so-called oppressed and forgotten black "Americans" were not the hardest hit, nor were their homes...the areas inhabited by the even lower class white trash were totally immersed in water...and until the water level can be pumped down, no telling how many they'll find dead.

You idiots back there need a visit from us over here in Iraq, Afghanistan, Bisnia, Middle East.....you are lame Americans, and we are sick and tired of your racial bigotry and treasonous demeanor....let me bring you over here, or even through you into that mess down south...but you are too busy with your selfish, miserable little meaningless lives to be "real" Americans let alone men.

Keep your BS views to yourself......perhaps having sex in the White House, sanctioning the stealing of billions of retiree funds in the stock market fiasco, the ultra-downsizing of the military, selling of of US control on the international bond market....shall I go on you Clinton lovers ??????

It is time for the "black" Americans to be dealt a heavy dose of reality in life. After 200 years they cannot get their act together ??? Seems that the Americans I serve with, and the Middle Eastern Negro race types had no problem...and talk about oppression...try here and in Africa...let's put it in simple truths...they do not want to work for anything...they think someone owes them everything, and they get handouts that none of us real Americans would ever accept.

Perhaps this hurricane can clean up New Orleans for the betterment of all peoples living there, black or white...it is time to haul out the trash down there....put these people to work cleaning up their beloved city...they can earn a skill and the money ethically for a change. Their "Brothers and sisters" humping alongside me are just as tired of their wailing as I. You clowns back there had better pack your bags too......if you don't like the USA, leave it....but no one would have you....so pitch in and help to build a better country....

Oh yes, even in the local newpapers over here...the people down there are calling for that "politically correct" governor to resign immediately. Seems you picked the wrong side in this fight. Show me some documented facts the next time you slander the President and the federal government. How I wish there was a draft .. then you too could EARN your citizenship, and see what a wonderfully brutal world we truly live in. Without America, there would killing on a global scale not seen since WW II. And without Bush, the word "freedom" here and in Egypt, and now Saudi Arabia would still be a dream to a people enslaved by Islamic propaganda designed to keep despots and dictators in power and in the money.

Bush did not fail again ... you sorry excuse for an American who never can take the time to research the canddiates, and vote for President or local officials that are qualified for the future dilemnas we face as a nation and a world are to blame.

And we over here have to listen to your incessant ignorant droning ..... you should be paid to pay for your laziness and indifference to our country.

AMERICA ... love it or leave ... or maybe it is time to help you leave it !!!

Pat Robertson's Katrina Cash
by MAX BLUMENTHAL
[posted online on September 7, 2005]

Every cloud has a silver lining. Hurricane Katrina has devastated New Orleans, leaving thousands dead and hundreds of thousands homeless, and plunging the entire city into chaos. In the hurricane's wake, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and its director, Michael Brown, forced out of his former job at the International Arabian Horse Association, with no credentials in disaster relief, have become targets of withering criticism. Yet FEMA's relief efforts have brought considerable assistance to at least one man who stands to benefit from Hurricane Katrina perhaps more than any other individual: Pat Robertson.

With the Bush Administration's approval, Robertson's $66 million relief organization, Operation Blessing, has been prominently featured on FEMA's list of charitable groups accepting donations for hurricane relief. Dozens of media outlets, including the New York Times, CNN and the Associated Press, duly reprinted FEMA's list, unwittingly acting as agents soliciting cash for Robertson. "How in the heck did that happen?" Richard Walden, president of the disaster-relief group Operation USA, asked of Operation Blessing's inclusion on FEMA's list. "That gives Pat Robertson millions of extra dollars."

Though Operation USA has conducted disaster relief for more than twenty-five years on five continents, like scores of other secular relief groups currently helping victims of Hurricane Katrina, it was omitted from FEMA's list. In fact, only two non-"faith-based" organizations were included. (One of them, the American Red Cross, is being blocked from entering New Orleans by FEMA's parent agency, the Department of Homeland Security.) FEMA, meanwhile, has reportedly turned away Wal-Mart trucks carrying food and water to the stricken city, teams of firemen from Maryland and Texas, volunteer morticians and a convoy of 1,000 boat owners offering to help rescue stranded flood victims. While relief efforts falter in the face of colossal bureaucratic incompetence, the Bush Administration's promotion of Operation Blessing has ensured that the floodwaters swallowing New Orleans will be a rising tide lifting Robertson's boat.

Robertson recently ignited a media firestorm when he called for the assassination of Venezuelan president Hugo Chï¿½vez during a broadcast of The 700 Club. He has also blamed the 9/11 attacks on America's tolerance of abortion and homosexuality and declared the Supreme Court a greater threat to the United States than Al Qaeda. Robertson assiduously cultivates his celebrity with remarks like these, casting himself as a divisive bigot to his foes and a righteous prophet to his allies in Christian right circles. But there is much more to Robertson than the headline-grabbing hothead he plays on TV.

Far from the media's gaze, Robertson has used the tax-exempt, nonprofit Operation Blessing as a front for his shadowy financial schemes, while exerting his influence within the GOP to cover his tracks. In 1994 he made an emotional plea on The 700 Club for cash donations to Operation Blessing to support airlifts of refugees from the Rwandan civil war to Zaire (now Congo). Reporter Bill Sizemore of The Virginian Pilot later discovered that Operation Blessing's planes were transporting diamond-mining equipment for the African Development Corporation, a Robertson-owned venture initiated with the cooperation of Zaire's then-dictator Mobutu Sese Seko.

After a lengthy investigation, Virginia's Office of Consumer Affairs determined that Robertson "willfully induced contributions from the public through the use of misleading statements and other implications." Yet when the office called for legal action against Robertson in 1999, Virginia Attorney General Mark Earley, a Republican, intervened with his own report, agreeing that Robertson had made deceptive appeals but overruling the recommendation for his prosecution. Two years earlier, while Virginia's investigation was gathering steam, Robertson donated $35,000 to Earley's campaign--Earley's largest contribution. With Earley's report came a sense of vindication. "From the very beginning," Robertson claimed, "we were trying to provide help and assistance to those who were facing disease and death in the war-torn, chaotic nation of Zaire."

(Earley is now president of Prison Fellowship Ministries, an evangelical social-work organization founded by born-again, former Nixon dirty-trickster Charles Colson. PFM has accepted White House faith-based-initiative money and is currently engaged in hurricane relief efforts in Louisiana. Earley remains a close ally of Robertson.)

Absolved of his sins, Robertson dug his heels back in African soil. In 1999 he signed an $8 million agreement with Liberian tyrant Charles Taylor that guaranteed Robertson's Freedom Gold Ltd.--an offshore company registered to the same address as his Christian Broadcasting Network--mining rights in Liberia, and gave Taylor a 10 percent stake in the company. When the United States intervened in Liberia in 2003, forcing Taylor and the Al Qaeda operatives he was harboring to flee, Robertson accused President Bush of "undermining a Christian, Baptist president to bring in Muslim rebels to take over the country."

Robertson's scheming hasn't abated one bit. He is accused of violating his ministry's tax- exempt, nonprofit status by using it to market a diet shake he licensed this August to the health chain General Nutrition Corp. (Robertson continues to advertise the shake on his personal website.) He has withstood criticism from fellow evangelicals for investing $520,000 in a racehorse named Mr. Pat, violating biblical admonitions against gambling. He was even accused of "Jim Crow-style racial discrimination" by black employees who successfully sued his Christian Coalition in 2001 for forcing them enter its offices through a back door and eat in a segregated area (Robertson has since resigned).

The Bush Administration has studiously overlooked Robertson's misdeeds. In October 2002, just months after he denounced the White House's faith-based initiative as "a real Pandora's box"--and one month before midterm elections--Robertson pocketed $500,000 in government grants to Operation Blessing. Since then, with the sole exception of his criticism of the US intervention in Liberia, Robertson has served as a willing surrogate for the Administration. His Regent University gave John Ashcroft a cushy professorship to cool his heels after his contentious tenure as US Attorney General. And Robertson's legal foundation, the American Center for Law and Justice, is spearheading the effort to rally right-wing Christian support for Judge John G. Roberts Jr.'s confirmation as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Now, as fallout from the President's handling of Hurricane Katrina threatens to derail the GOP's long-term agenda, Robertson is back at the plate for Bush, echoing the White House's line that state and local authorities--and even the disaster victims themselves--are to blame for the tragedy engulfing New Orleans.

The September 5 edition of The 700 Club included a report by Christian Broadcasting Network correspondent Gary Lane from outside the ruined New Orleans Convention Center, which had housed mostly impoverished black disaster victims throughout the weekend. "A number of possessions left behind suggest the mindset of some of the evacuees," Lane said. "They include this voodoo cup with the saying, 'May the curse be with you.' " A shot of a plastic souvenir cup from one of New Orleans's countless trinket shops appeared on the screen. "Also music CDs with the titles Guerrilla Warfare and Thugs 'R' Us," Lane stated, pointing out a pile of rap CDs strewn on the ground.

The 700 Club's featured guest was Wellington Boone, a black minister invited by Robertson to provide a counterpoint to the ubiquitous Rev. Jesse Jackson. Boone is a member of the Coalition on Revival, a Christian Reconstructionist organization that advocates replacing the US Constitution with biblical law. Throughout his career, he has distinguished himself from his black clerical colleagues with such remarks as "I believe that slavery, and the understanding of it when you see it God's way, was redemptive" and "The black community must stop criticizing Uncle Tom. He is a role model."

Though Boone's appearance on The 700 Club consisted mostly of benign appeals for "laser- beam prayer," CBN featured a separate interview with Boone on its website in which he declared, "We need to consider the culture of those people still stranded in New Orleans. The looting of property, the trashing of property, et cetera, speaks to the basic character of the people." He added, "These people who have gone through slavery, segregation and the Voting Rights Act are doing this to themselves."

Boone's appearance on The 700 Club had been preceded by an interview with Operation Blessing President Bill Horan. Horan discussed his group's activities in Biloxi, Mississippi, where it plans to set up a mobile kitchen, and in Houston, Dallas and Beaumont, Texas, where it is disbursing cash grants to numerous, mostly unspecified mega-churches, purportedly to support their work with evacuated hurricane victims.

As for the people still stranded in New Orleans who "are doing this to themselves," as Boone said, Operation Blessing has a special plan: avoid them like the plague.

"I've actually heard reports that they [the people of Mississippi] were in worse trouble" than those in New Orleans, claimed Gordon Robertson, the son of Pat Robertson and vice president of The 700 Club. "They were actually harder hit."

"Oh, absolutely," agreed Horan.

At the segment's conclusion, Gordon Robertson asked Horan, "What can people do today? If you were asking for help today, what's the number-one need?"

"It's cash. Cash is what we need more than anything," Horan pleaded. "The more cash we get, the more good we can do." And the Bush Administration, through FEMA, is doing its best to insure that Pat Robertson is getting that cash just as quickly as humanly possible.

"It was the most earnest ambition I ever had....Not that I ever really wanted to be a preacher, but because it never occurred to me that a preacher could be damned. It looked like a safe job."

I think you need to get a grip. You can stick up for your friend Pete Peterbreath all you want, though I'm a little appalled that you would come to his defense. I'm not attacking real Christians. I don't consider racist and anti-Semite extremists Like Perterbrain to be a real Christians. I'm a Christian. I wouldn't withhold aid from Christians or non-Christians, whites or non-whites. I just think it's remarkable that Peterhead would. That was the jist of my post. I think most people got it. I don't see why you don't. Are you just looking to bash Democrats? Do you think I'm a Democrat?

He failed to lead. FEMA is in disarray. The FEMA leader, an political appointee of Bush, lied on his resume, and has shown how serious a lack of emergency management experience can be. And I'm not defending the inept mayor and governor.

Where are you, Iraq? Are you in the military? You have my respect. But your demands that everyone must agree with you or leave the country are a little hard to swallow. Spiro Agnew used to make the same demands.

I don't think there's anything salacious about it. He just padded his resume. It's relevant in that in that his qualifications are being questioned.

'THE BIG BOO' CROWD HISSES KANYE WEST
Fri Sep 09 2005 10:30:28 ET

The chart topping hip hop rapper star who used a network hurricane fundraiser to charge "George Bush doesn't care about black people" was loudly and lustily booed during last night's NFL kickoff show.

The appearance of Kanye West, who was beamed into the Boston stadium via remote from Los Angeles, received a strongly negative response from the crowd.

"The boos were thunderous and lasted for much of his number," reports the BOSTON GLOBE.

Rick: (Oops! or should I say "David")

You've ben banging your head too much again!

KNAC
>From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.

KNAC was a heavy metal radio station based in Long Beach, California. It was first programmed to keep up with the new fad in LA music, heavy metal. The first song it ever played was AC/DC's anthem, 'It's A Long Way To The Top', in early 1986. As new bands like Guns N' Roses and Metallica achieved huge commercial success in the late 1980s, the station's fan base grew. They printed out rather plain bumper stickers and t-shirts. Although they are not much to look at, many headbangers in southern California owned a t-shirt or bumper sticker with the black 105.5 logo printed on it. Some of the bands that were played most included Judas Priest, Scorpions, Rush, and Metallica, as well as mainstream metal bands such as Van Halen, Mötley Crüe, and Ratt

When the Seattle grunge scene emerged in early 1992, however, metal was beginning to lose popularity. In trying to keep up with the times, KNAC began to play grunge/alternative bands like Pearl Jam and Nirvana. Many metalheads disliked KNAC's new format and ratings went down. In 1994, KNAC announced they were being sold to a Spanish station. Horrified metalheads began tuning in again, to find that KNAC had returned to their metal format for the few last months. Again headbangers could hear the classic metal they had not heard in a while, like Megadeth or Saxon. Finally, the last day arrived. February 15, 1995 was the day. James Hetfield and Lars Ulrich of Metallica guest DJed to show their support.

The last song to be played on the legendary channel was Metallica's "Fade To Black." At 1:59 p.m., KNAC went off the air with a short good-bye from the manager, Gary Price. In 1998, KNAC decided they would start broadcasting again via Internet. KNAC.com is now one of the top Internet radio stations.

I wonder what Kayne is actually doing to help the large group of black people from New Orleans. Seems to be pretty effective at whining. Bush is sending billions of dollars south, including cash cards with $2,000 loaded onto each one. How much money did Kayne send.

Not a bad idea. There are, as dxAce would also point out, several books out there that already attempt to put information out for the beginner. I personally don't know of any modern books that try to conveniently wrap all the most important basic points in one (including some of the nifty tech stuff related to odd equipment and propagation details), but there may be some.

Perhaps this newsgroup, if it could set aside its differences for a few months, could concoct such a "book" and place it online. Certainly the expertise is here, and as long as we could agree on careful definitions and clear explanations, we might have something of lasting value (instead of all the superfluous, if occasionally interesting, bickering about hurricanes and Iraq and politics).

A nice small dream...

This is logically inconsistent. You are willing to extrapolate without question from one part of the documentary evidence (for the politician you love) and unwilling to accept another part of the record (for the politician you hate).

BTW, I was careful and precise in my wording. There is at least one of his Purple Hearts that has gone uncontested, even by the Kerry haters. I assert that my statement was correct and your attempt to contradict it is a failure based on a false extrapolation.

I was in Los Angeles for a conference a Dutch-american guy...

When I introduced myself at the keynote, the Dutch-American guy jumped up and said:

"I was a 5 year old boy in Holland when the Canadians liberated us from the Germans..
I never had the chance to thank you Canadians.."

Honestly, folks... I was moved to tears on the spot.

Threw off my speech too..

George Bush is doing something positive and big in his position as president. Kayne West in his position as "musician" has chosen to whine about how Bush and the white folks are not taking care of the poor black folks. But I guess that is what Hip Hop and Rap is mostly about - whining and filthy language. And I'm sure he will sell more of his "music" in the process.

Check out 9.975 with another kook right wing talk show host who live call-in's are openly calling on private citizens to resist evacuations in NO via force of arms. (while the host would not go that far to endorse the caller, he responded by saying that there were reports of white humvees with UN markings parked in some Red Roof or Motel 6 hotels in Naton Rouge with blue beret wearing "furriners" staying the night therin...)

This is truly KOOK RADIO at it's very best. Much more entartaining than CNN.

I did go to the Goodwill store this afternoon (I bought three books,Young Peoples Science Encyclopedia,America's First Battles,and Charles Dickens The Norton Anthology Hard Times and an old crank style pencil sharpener,$1.75 plus Mississippi RIPP OFF sales taxes for all four items) and I did tell those women about Imelda condi rice Marcos.I told them,Don't donate to the red cross.There was a woman shopper in the store and she said she said she was in the U.S.Army for ten years and (she nearly flew off the handle when I mentioned the red cross) she said,you are right! she said she knows all about the red cross!!!

Whoa there big fella. Take a little closer look at the federal income tax code before saying the rich do not pay as much in proportion. Tax rates rise with income levels, deductions and exemptions are phased out as income level rises and many americans are hit hard by the AMT.

The middle class as a group pays more than the upper 10% of income earners because there is a whole lot more of them, not because the tax rates are lower.

Reality: According to data from the Internal Revenue Service, the top 1 percent of income earners pay nearly 35 percent of the income tax burden; the top 10 percent pay 65 percent; and the top 25 percent pay nearly 83 percent.
The bottom 50 percent of income earners, on the other hand, pay barely 4 percent of income taxes. By definition, then, it is impossible to cut taxes without the so-called rich receiving a share of the benefits.

What? The US? No, not quite a utopia. The budget deficit is out of

Unfortunately, the only safe way to fire up a radio of this vintage is with a variac, a variable transformer that allows you to bring the supply voltage up to 120 gradually. Any number of components in the PS are likely to be bad, esp. if the radio hasn't been used for a while. Usually this will only cause a tube to blow (of course if it is the 1L6 this would be a costly replacement), but the cause needs to be diagnosed and corrected.

This radio used a battery pack which is long-since unavailable; there are modern substitutes, but any of them would cost a lot more than a variac, which last I looked, are pretty easy to find on eBay.

As another poster suggested there is a lot of expertise available on the antiques.radio+phono group. There's also a webpage with info and links at www.transoceanic.nostalgiaair.org

By the way, I watched "Kiss Me Deadly" recently and noticed that a 600 series Transoceanic features prominently in one scene.

So you were unsuccessful in your attempts, and that means ham radio in general was also unsuccessful? Better think again, there are numerous news account of the hams doing a great job of providing help.

Non-response ????? Ur gear needs a tumeup M8. Even here in Canada I can here them hour after hour on 20 passing traffic on SATERN. The papers and CNN have all carried stories of ham radio in action in the aftermath of Katrina. WHen the cellphones and landlines are out is exactly whne ham radio gets its second wind. Sure propagation has been lousy, but it has certainly not detered the folks on 14.265. It may take several relays and extra work but they are there and they are making a difference.

I own an old,old variac transformer,or something practically the same thing.It is sitting in a wooden box I made to store it in.I don''t remember the paticular brand name of it though,Variac? or whatever.I think it dates back to the 1940's or 1950's.I bought it at a thrift store about ten years ago.When I brought it home,I plugged it in (the electric cord on it is still in good condition) and I connected my Fluke digital multimeter to it and I turned the voltage control knob.It seemed to me to be working perfectly.I only paid two dollars for it.If somebody can find some pictures of those old vairable voltage transformers on the internet,there be a picture of one just like the one I own.It isn't for sale or trade though,I don't get rid of my old things I want to keep.

Gourdhead gore once had some water (water that was needed elsewhere in that town or another nearby town,I don't remember the name of the town now) diverted in a River in a New England town for one of his Stupid Staged Photo Ops of him paddling a canoe down the River when he was running for prez.Even Tennessee didn't vote for Gourdhead gore.

I finally got one of the DE1107s, and I am very pleased with it. For anyone who doesn't know, the DE1107 is an analog radio the same size as a DE1103, but it costs much less.

There is a DE1107 Yahoo group for anyone who has the radio, hopes to get the radio, or is even vaguely interested in the radio. If you go there, please take part in the poll. I'm really curious about how people feel about this radio.

These old radios suffer from failed (leaky) electrolytic capacitors in the power supply.

Start at a low AC voltage with a VARIAC and with the radio ON urge the variac voltage upwards slowly and if you hear a hum, a LOUD hum in the speaker, shut it down and plan on replacing all large electrolytics, especially the multi-section caps.

Look for melted wax from coupling capacitors. Replace them immediatemente!

Then after you do that, try again and if successful, expect to replace smaller caps, micas, coupling and decoupling caps, and hopefully you will eventually get pure DC where it's supposed to be and pure RF where IT's supposed to be.

I did this once or twice and it's more than a two six-pack job.

Plan on weeks!

He sure did, but did he furnish transportation for those who had no means to leave the area? No. Instead, all the school buses left the area taking NO ONE other than the drivers with them. It makes no sense to order everyone to evacuate without giving people a way to evacuate that have no means of transportation. The mayor is definitely at fault here.

What you wrote is above.

What I'm hearing is that it is OK for you to respond to (clearly marked) OT posts but not anyone else.

Sort of like what started this go-around: OK for you to vote for who you want to, but ridicule Greg for who he votes for.

The circle is complete--that brings us back to foolishly thinking "Democracy" again...

Nice try at dodging the issue, but no cigar. (However, I'll see if Klintoon will give you one, but don't complain if it's a little soggy).

- Already startin to smear Ray Nagin

http://www.snopes.com/politics/katrina/nagin.asp

Blame Nagin

Claim: New Orleans mayor Ray Nagin and Louisiana governor Kathleen Blanco refused President Bush's pleas to declare an emergency in Louisiana before Hurricane Katrina struck.

Status: False.

Example: [Collected via e-mail, 2005]

This is a post from a fellow over in Merritt Is, FL, a reporter who's been researching what went on before the storm hit:

I think all of Nagin's pomp and posturing is going to bite him hard in the near future as the lies and distortions of his interviews are coming to light.

On Friday night before the storm hit Max Mayfield of the National Hurricane Center took the unprecedented action of calling Nagin and Blanco personally to plead with them to begin MANDATORY evacuation of NO and they said they'd take it under consideration. This was after the NOAA buoy 240 miles south had recorded 68' waves before it was destroyed.

President Bush spent Friday afternoon and evening in meetings with his advisors and administrators drafting all of the paperwork required for a state to request federal assistance (and not be in violation of the Posse Comitatus Act or having to enact the Insurgency Act). Just before midnight Friday evening the President called Governor Blanco and pleaded with her to sign the request papers so the federal government and the military could legally begin mobilization and call up. He was told that they didn't think it necessary for the federal government to be involved yet. After the President's final call to the governor she held meetings with her staff to discuss the political ramifications of bringing federal forces. It was decided that if they allowed federal assistance it would make it look as if they had failed so it was agreed upon that the feds would not be invited in.

Saturday before the storm hit the President again called Blanco and Nagin requesting they please sign the papers requesting federal assistance, that they declare the state an emergency area, and begin mandatory evacuation. After a personal plea from the President Nagin agreed to order an evacuation, but it would not be a full mandatory evacuation, and the governor still refused to sign the papers requesting and authorizing federal action. In frustration the President declared the area a national disaster area before the state of Louisiana did so he could legally begin some advanced preparations. Rumor has it that the President's legal advisers were looking into the ramifications of using the insurgency act to bypass the Constitutional requirement that a state request federal aid before the federal government can move into state with troops - but that had not been done since 1906 and the Constitutionality of it was called into question to use before the disaster.

Throw in that over half the federal aid of the past decade to NO for levee construction, maintenance, and repair was diverted to fund a marina and support the gambling ships. Toss in the investigation that will look into why the emergency preparedness plan submitted to the federal government for funding and published on the city's web site was never implemented and in fact may have been bogus for the purpose of gaining additional federal funding as we now learn that the organizations identified in the plan were never contacted or coordinating into any planning - though the document implies that they were.

The suffering people of NO need to be asking some hard questions as do we all, but they better start with why Blanco refused to even sign the multi-state mutual aid pack activation documents until Wednesday which further delayed the legal deployment of National Guard from adjoining states. Or maybe ask why Nagin keeps harping that the President should have commandeered 500 Greyhound busses to help him when according to his own emergency plan and documents he claimed to have over 500 busses at his disposal to use between the local school busses and the city transportation busses - but he never raised a finger to prepare them or activate them.

This is a sad time for all of us to see that a major city has all but been destroyed and thousands of people have died with hundreds of thousands more suffering, but it's certainly not a time for people to be pointing fingers and trying to find a bigger dog to blame for local corruption and incompetence. Pray to God for the survivors that they can start their lives anew as fast as possible and we learn from all the mistakes to avoid them in the future.

Origins: Sorting out who should have done what, and when, to head off the disaster in New Orleans produced by Hurricane Katrina will undoubtedly take a very long time (and the issue may never ultimately be resolved). A preliminary timeline doesn't seem to support the sequence of events claimed in the article quoted above, however:

* According to the St. Petersburg Times, Max Mayfield of the National Hurricane Center contacted government officials in Louisiana and Mississippi on Saturday night (27 August), not Friday night.

* According to the New Orleans Times-Picayune, President Bush's first communication with Louisiana governor Kathleen Blanco occurred on Sunday morning (August 28), just before a 9:30 AM press conference called by Governor Blanco and Mayor Nagin to announce the latter's mandatory evacuation order for New Orleans.

* On Friday (26 August), Governor Blanco did indeed declare a state of emergency for the state of Louisiana in advance of Katrina's making landfall in the Gulf Coast.

* On Saturday (27 August), Governor Blanco asked President Bush to declare a state of emergency at the federal level for the state of Louisiana.

* The White House responded to Governor Blanco's request that same day (Saturday) by declaring the emergency and authorizing FEMA "to identify, mobilize, and provide at its discretion, equipment and resources necessary to alleviate the impacts of the emergency."

Well,just a thought (seeeee how thoughtfull and super intelligent I am!) but what if the wall wart(s) were plugged into an outlet outside of the house,in a garage,for example and the wall wart(s) were inside of a metal can/bucket,whatever,completly enclosed inside of the metal container (perhaps a container made of copper?,a copper tea kettle?) and a couple of holes were cut/drilled into the metal container for the electric cord(s) of the wall wart(s) and a long extension cord was run into the house? Would that help some or not or make any difference at all? I don't know.

Come now, I know you are more intelligent than that. Obviously, "flim-flammed and chumped" are my words. But my intent is to illustrate that people are starting to realize they have been had, lied to about a lot of things and that things are not at all rosy in Bunny Pants land.

Breaking News Alert!!!

Colin Powell, key player and point man for the war in Iraq, admitted to the nation today on ABC News that WMDs were a lie and that there was no 9/11 connection with Iraq, also a lie and thus essentially admitting that the Iraq "war" is a sham.

So, yes, the American people were chumped. However, if the colloquialism "chumped" offends your delicate sensitivities, please feel free to substitute the phrase "blatantly lied to".

Mr. Powell, thanks for helping me support "that ridiculous claim". (I hope -=jd=- considers your confession on national TV as "anything of substance").

Hi.
The E1 is the same price as the 800 Satellite!!!
The only problem is he will never use the XM Radio ....which begs the next question- Is the E1 less of a radio in regards to SW and AM reception and or quality than the 800? If it is the same then guess I could get that one? The Palsar R30C was my choice but he wants sleep timer and it does not have one..I sure liked the 800's large knobs. readout etc...
Thanks for the help..
PS- the only 2 'where to buy from Eton site was Universal and a Canadian radio place which told me the 800 is discontinued...

Regards
Tom

a Time Line of :
* Where, What and When Happen and When Not
* Who Did What and When and When Not
* How Things Got Done and Never Got Done
One of ATC Threads delt with the fact that
New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson offered Louisiana Gov. Kathleen Blanco help from the New Mexico State's National Guard on Sunday, 28th August, the day before Hurricane Katrina hit Louisiana.
Note - Because the agreement that was already in existence for States to contribute Guard troops to Louisiana did not include a provision on their use in Law Enforcement the Louisiana Governor had to get separate written agreements authorizing Guardsmen to do Police-Type Duty. More Delays...

Greg - The "FEMA" Federal Emergency Management Agency works in our Federal - State - Local Government System of

The proper Question Becomes . . .
WHY IS FEMA FAILING IN THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS ? ? ?

- - - Because in spite of the best efforts of the Mayor and FEMA.
- - - The Governor of the State of Louisiana is Road Blocking

But Lets 'forget' the Facts and the Truth and get back on the Message of the Democrat Party of the USA :
It's All Bush's Fault ! - Bush Failed ! - Blame Bush !
* President George "W" Bush {He is a Republican = Bad & Evil}
All Together Now - blame bush,,, Blame Bush... BLAME BUSH ! ! !

Nothing is too kooky for Coast to Coast AM. It's owned by Bushites and their pals at Carlyle. At least Jeff Rense has the US 'intelligence' community patriots on his side. They know how to kill someone 30 different ways, you know. And they're not Bush fans.

This can happen even when listening on the transmitting

Under average circumstances, a dipole at proper elevation

I don't think this topic is that simple and I can see that many people don't understand it. Some of these are technical terms for devices that perform certain functions but for starters they are not all the same.
It is not a trivial task to get these devices to operate with a flat response 500 KHz to 30 MHz, which is what most people want in a receiving system.

Greg,
The US Presidential Election Process is actually a three tiered system :
* The Popular Vote of the States determine the States Electors.
* The States Electors Vote for the President.
* The US Congress Accepts the Vote of the Electors.
Note - The use of the Combined Number of Senators and Representatives to make up the Total Number of Electors ensures that the smaller States have weighted impact on the US Presidential Election Process.
So the Popular Vote does play a significant part in the Process; however it is not the final deciding factor.
Therefore :
It can be said that it is the Broad Consensus of the States {Not the People} Which Selects the US President.

What school buses? How many were there? How many remained that had to be evacuated? Could a large % of those wanting to leave be taken away in those buses? Who would drive the buses? Where were they supposed to go? Would they have enough gas to get there?

The bus situation is something that will have to be examined.

> It makes no sense > to order everyone to evacuate without giving people a way to evacuate > that have no means of transportation.

Ok, that makes sense. How many more needed to be evacuated? What resources were available? What about the invalid, wheelchair bound, elderly, blind, deaf etc?

> The mayor is definitely at fault > here.

What do other cities do to evacuate their population during disaster? Do you live in a big city? If a disaster strikes where you live, what plans are in place? Do they have the capability of evacuating every person?

On the Federal level, the Dept. of Homeland security had never thought about a scenario where the first responders (police/firefighters/ambulance) would be largely incapacitated (dead). They too had no plan in place to deal with what happened in NO. Are they responsible?

The Feds decided not to go ahead an enter the city with miltary, even though they could legally do so without the local consent, because they feared the political repercussions. Should policy be based on politics or based on what's right? If politics was allowed to cloud the judgement, could other factors then also be clouding judgement?

Was cronyism the best way to fill a high profile job with FEMA? What was the hiring process? Why was the previous director let go? Was it because of politics?

So many questions

I'm not sure how he capitalizes on that. He was a fast rising musician well before that. His father was a member of the Black Panthers. He's got a political opinion. It's ok for Bush to get photo-ops with Lance Armstrong and Tom Brady. Why is it that when he gets bad press form a celebrity it's a surprise?

http://maps.google.com/maps?q=New+Orleans&t=e has up to date sat photos of the area and you can zoom in to find clusters of abandoned busses all over the city. There are some pictures of them on news:alt.binary.pictures.radio under the heading of: OT: New Orleans Satellite Photograph (annotated) but you might find more if you have the time to search the whole area.

Now now, nobody in the UK eats horsemeat. Not unless some sneaky country packages it and labels it something else and cheekily imports it in.. So whats the great meal you guys take pride in?? Cant be that turkey at thanksgiving surely..
Potatoes are one of the most resourceful foods on the planet. You can make so much from them, my favorite being Chips or in your case, fries. Roast potatoes are gorgeous (when done right) then theres mash which can be more flavoured by many things, the fav being cheese and then lightly grilled on the top. Then theres the good old baked potatoe with whatever stuffing you fancy....... so how can you knock the jolly old spud??

As for cabbage.... yuck.... but you arent forced to eat it by law

DX Ace,
The original Act of Congress that Created FEMA and became a Federal Law governing the relationship between FEMA and the States gives the individual States the Right to Request, Accept or Reject {Block} FEMA's Access, Actions and Aid within each State.
The Governor of the State of Louisiana choose to Delay and Block FEMA's Actions in and around the City of New Orleans; although FEMA was generally free to work in the rest of the State.

FWIW - It sure looks like the Governor, State Government and the Democrat Party of the State of Louisiana are trying to depopulate the City of New Orleans and export their Poor Black Folks to other states prior to beginning the re-building of the 'new' City of New Orleans.

The Truth About - Income Taxes and Who Pays
FACT - The simple reality is by using your Numbers and after reviewing the Link that you supplied : That the Income Tax could be Eliminated for the Bottom 50% of USA Taxpayers and it would only cost the Federal Government least than 5% of Total Income Tax Revenues.
QUESTION - So the Question becomes Why have not both the Democrats and Republicans supported the Elimination of the Income Tax for the Bottom 50% of USA Tax Payers ?
WHY - Because the US Income Tax has become a Negative Income Tax Program with things like the Earn Income Credit for the Working Poor and other Pay-Out type
"Tax Gifts" by the Federal Government.
CAUTION - The 'so called' Flat Income Tax is a Rip-Off of the Working Poor, Average Wage Earner and the Middle Class and lets the High Income Wage Earners (Rich) escape paying a Fair Share of their Disposable Income to Support the Cost of Running the Federal Government.
WARNING - The 'so called' National Sales Tax [Flat Tax] is an even bigger Rip-Off of the Working Poor, Average Wage Earner and the Middle Class and lets the High Income Wage Earners (Rich) 'escape' paying an even Greater Share of their Disposable Income to Support the Cost of Running the Federal Government.

Share? Why should ANYONE have to pay a higher percentage than anyone else?

Simply by virtue of the fact that they can AFFORD to?

That's income redistribution.

FDR, might I suggest that it has gone beyond the "highly questionable" stage.

Colin Powell, key player and point man for the war, flat-out admitted to the nation on TV last night that the information was dead wrong and that this would be "a blot on his record for the rest of his life".

Poor Mr. Powell--sorry about his "blot", but too bad he forgot about the old saying that goes "When you lie down with dogs, you get fleas".

Guess that cherry wood must enhance reception. Think I'll glue a piece on the back of each one of the Drakes.

They're not into little pieces of wood. Their radios are more for 'logging'.

Physician who told Cheney to go F*ck Himself Lost his Home in Katrina, Detained, Cuffed by Cheney's M-16-carrying Goons

by Jackson Thoreau

http://www.opednews.com

Dr. Ben Marble, a young emergency room physician who plays in alternative rock bands and does art on the side, needs our help. Since he was the one who told Dick Cheney to "go fuck yourself" on Sept. 8, that's the least we can do.

Marble is a complex guy, to say the least. Some of the lyrics he writes can be considered harsh by some ï¿½ personally what I've heard is very much on target - but he has a softer side as an organizer of breast cancer fund-raisers, not to mention an ER doctor.

When he, like thousands of others, lost his home due to Hurricane Katrina last week, it was the single most traumatic week of his life. That led to his Sept. 8 confrontation with the man who best represents the worst of the most callous, heartless, shittiest administration in U.S. history.

As Marble explains, he was driving to his destroyed house Sept. 8 in Gulfport, Ms., when military police refused to allow him to cross a barricade that was about 200 feet from his home. They forced him to drive an extra 20 minutes and spend even more on gasoline.

"Thanks to Dubya Gump and Mr. Cheney, gas is really expensive and extremely hard to get anywhere Katrina has destroyed," Marble wrote. "So needless to say, I was extremely aggravated that they wouldn't let me pass."

Suddenly a long line of dark cars pulled up, and they honked at Marble to back up to let them through the barricade that supposedly no one could drive through. That only made Marble madder so he did what most of us would do ï¿½ or at least consider doing.

"I waved a middle finger at the caravan," Marble wrote.

After driving the extra 20 minutes and filming video of destruction along the way, he made it to his home. Marble overheard a neighbor say that Cheney was down the street talking to people. That's when he got the idea to go meet Dr. Evil himself.

"I am no fan of Mr. Cheney because of several reasons," Marble wrote. "For those who don't know, Mr. Cheney is infamous for telling Senator [Pat] Leahy 'go fu yourself' on the Senate floor. Also, I am not happy about the fact that thousands have died due to the slow action of FEMA, not to even mention the wrong war in the wrong place at the wrong time, i.e. Iraq."

So Marble, who was wearing an old Mr. T "I Pity Da Fool" t-shirt since he was sifting through the wreckage, asked a couple of police officers if he and a friend could walk down to Cheney. They told him Cheney was "looking forwardï¿½ to talking to ï¿½the locals.ï¿½

"So we grabbed my Canon digital rebel and my Sony videocamera and started walking down the street," Marble wrote. "And then right in front of the destroyed tennis court I used to play on Dick Cheney was giving a pep rally, talking to the press. The Secret Service guys patted us down and waved the wands over us, and then let us pass."

As he stood about 10 feet away from Cheney and his friend and some camera operators from CNN and other media filmed the scene, Marble suddenly yelled, "Go fuck yourself, Mr. Cheney! Go fuck yourself, you asshole!"

Hey, at least Marble was polite. After all, he referred to Cheney as ï¿½Mr. Cheney.ï¿½

"I had no intention of harming anyone but merely wanted to echo Mr. Cheney's infamous words back at him," Marble wrote. "At that moment, I noticed the Secret Service guys with a panic-stricken look on their faces, like they were about to tackle me, so I calmly walked away back to my former house."

His friend videotaped a little bit longer and then came back to Marbleï¿½s house. As they were salvaging a few things from Marble's home, two military police waving M-16's showed up and said they were looking for someone who fit Marble's description who had cursed at Cheney.

"I told them I was probably the person they were looking for, and so they put me in handcuffs and 'detained' me for about 20 minutes or so," Marble wrote. "My right thumb went numb because the cuffs were on so tight, but they were fairly courteous and eventually released me after getting all my contact info. They said I had NOT broken any laws so I was free to go."

So letï¿½s get this straight: A physician with a newborn baby loses most everything he owns in the hurricane, does what most of us WANT to do and ï¿½echoesï¿½ Cheneyï¿½s words he spoke on the Senate floor last year, walks away harmlessly, mission accomplished, and then once the media cameras leave, he is treated like a foreign terrorist as Cheneyï¿½s goons waving M-16s handcuff him in front of his destroyed home? Had it not been for the media cameras filming the initial scene, I doubt Cheneyï¿½s goons would have just let Marble go after 20 minutes.

America, land of the free?

Marble and his family have been in the media spotlight before, including his wife, Lisa, and baby, Sofia Grace, who was born shortly after the storm, on CNN. Marble has also been interviewed in art magazines and the Biloxi Sun Herald about his concert fund-raisers and musical success ï¿½ one of his bands, dR. O, has had at least 20 No. 1 songs on the MP3.com charts.

"The truth is even with all our losses, we are still luckier than many people down here because at least we didn't die," Marble wrote. "But I thought I could try to raise some awareness to the bad policies of the Dubya Gump administration and also possibly raise some money to replace the many things we lost, and so I decided I would auction the videotape my friend shot of the event. I will also grant an interview to the winner if so desired."

So go to eBay here and place a bid for this important video to help Marble raise some needed funds. I have done so and was at least at one time the high bidder.

Marble also has an Internet site with photographs of some damage in his town at www.HurricaneKatrinaSucked.com. A photo of him is here, and you can also email Marble at clone9@yahoo.com.

Dr. Ben Marble, you rock. May we all return the favor.

UPDATE: Late Friday, Sept. 9, eBay, which is owned by strong Bush-Cheney supporters, took down Marble's site. Marble said it was because he didnï¿½t bleep out the first ï¿½fuï¿½ of ï¿½fuck,ï¿½ so he did that, and the eBay site is back up here. The bidding is over $1,000, as of late Sept. 9.

How am I a hypocrite, 'tard boy? The operation costs about $30,000.

How about making hamburgers out of those 200 cows at the bush "ranch" (it isn't a real Ranch though,it is only for show and tell,bush's "retirement ranch,HA! I wonder how much time he will stay at the "ranch"? when he retires,I bet he will be showing up at lots of places just like his buddy klintoon) for the Katrina evacuees and thousands of house trailers all over that bush "ranch" for some of the Katrina evacuees? Lots of wide open spaces over there.And bush can let them sit on his retirement porch and let them learn him how to play that Guitar.

From what I have heard or read, they did ask for assistance. But it also seems that one of the requests wasn't specific enough. Apparently the Feds require that you specifically state what you want. She reiterated the request, and specifying more troops on the second day.

Why should it matter? If it was the right thing to do then it could have been easily justified. I'm sure the people stranded there wouldn't have cared.

Bush doesn't care about the liberal cause anyway. He does whatever the hell he wants. This situation should have been no different.

I wasn't impressed with the original CCRadio. I thought it was way too expensive, and this smaller and more simple version costs just as much as I paid for the original one.

Some radios are must-haves for me, but there's nothing I see so far about the Mini that makes me want one.

Kinda pricey for an AM FM portable radio. I'm surprised that they took a step back 25 years with the space wasting combined digital and analog displays. Just what are the "gems inside that turn the Mini CC into a communications grade radio with infinite adjustments...you have the option of a background, professional mode". None of the links on the CC site could provide a list.

So far it is a lot more sizzle than steak.

Middle class is buried within the bottom 50% and between the top 25% and the bottom 50% statistics you quoted. Very confusing and essentially worthless statistics for identifying the middle class in terms of income and taxes paid. Still the point can be made that our income tax system does tax income at progessively higher rates and that the lowest income earners pay the lowest income taxes, whether measured by rate or total paid by group.

Point is that your statement "The middle class as a group pays more than the upper 10% of income earners..." is incorrect, since the upper 10% pay 65% of the income taxes as stated. And of course the upper 1% pays 35% so it's pretty clear that the 'middle class' does not pay more.

But I suppose it hinges on where you place the boundaries on what is considered 'middle class' income. Generally, 'middle class' falls between $25,000 and $75,000 per year. Upper income folks (above $75,000) make up about 26% of all households.

Therefore, the upper 10% are making a lot of money, AND paying 65% of the tax burden... and the 'middle class' can't be paying more.

The stats are hardly confusing nor worthless, if one knows how to read them.

I have some old radios that get sort of like that sometimes.Tuner control,on/off/volume control,etc.Usually it is a thin nut on the shaft that needs tightened back up.Sometimes,they are very hard to reach to tightned them back up unless you remove the radio chassis from the radio's cabinet so you can gain access to the nut.

We chased around this tree once before. I mentioned my dx credentials (and told you up front that they were two-way, but that a country is a country) and just got one of your rude Magic 8 Ball "answers" for my trouble. It seems that you are the one that can't read or remember.

You might ask yourself that same question. As of approximately 1 PM EDT today, of your last 100 posts [1], two, maybe three could be considered "on topic".

So once again, it looks like you are saying that you are the only one allowed to respond to off-topic posts.

Can you say "hypocrite"?

Sure you can!

Now run along and try and squeeze one more rude reply out of your Magic 8 Ball...

Note [1]: With six thousand seven hundred and twenty eight (6,728!) posts since July 30, 2004, maybe you should self-appoint yourself the "Master of Blather". At least it would be a self-appointed title you actually earned. ;-)

Not really. Are any of them shortwave broadcast or even utilities? If not perhaps you'd better run back to an amateur radio group and troll there.

Anybody can set up QSO's to run their totals up. Try making a sked with a shortwave broadcast station!

By the way, I'm an amateur as well, and I can tell you which hobby aspect of radio is more challenging.

Guess that cherry wood must enhance reception. Think I'll glue a piece on the back of each one of the Drakes.

I've also found that when you place pieces of cherry inside of a lit wood stove, it seems to emit some kind of warmth. Isn't cherry jusy marvelous??

If memory serves, the SS arrested a heckler at one of Clinton's speeches, held him incommunicado for several days in clear and deliberate violation of his rights. In short, treated an American citizen worse than they allow known terrorists to be treated.

The only way democracy propagates is by the people wanting it badly enough to die for it.

It is not something to be spread.

The United States is supposed to lead by example. (Actually, we do.
That's why the whole world is screwed up)

It's "Coming Soon!" on the Canadian Circuit City website for CDN$599.99 less $25 if you pay by using a The Source By Circuit City Credit Card. At CDN$1 = US$0.84, it's cheaper in the US.

With approval granted and supported by Cabinet for both XM and Sirius to operate in Canada, the XM option might find some traction.

I was listening to Radio Netherlands when they dropped out on 17,735 and 15,315 with the usual very strong signal and they just dropped into the noise. Transmitter trouble? Nope, big solar flare.

You are wrong. We are about to be blasted by an immense ball of energy.

It is cycling through the universe and enhanced every time it passes earth.

It is enhanced by all the tin hats worn by the global warming doomsdayers, blame the hurricane on some government, dead seals, UFO spotters. It was initiated by Halliburton to create more contracts.

The common saying is see "the other side". It is a mistranslation of kiss my behind.

Even MORE great info on the Senator from PA:

here--> http://www.spreadingsantorum.com/index2.html

In a fascinating twist of fate, Rick Santorum has an office in Northeast Penna. that is adjacent to and shares a wall with gay bar. By the way, santorum has entered this part of the state's lexicon. I am as amused as I am disgusted.

North East Pennsylvania Amusement

I don't know if you already know this becasue I have not read your column consistently, but when rick santorum was running for the legislature the first time, way back when, he stood outside on Rodi Road and Frankstown Avenue in Penn Hills wearing a sandwich board proclaiming his candidacy, while grinningly waving to passing traffic. It was the most undignified thing I ever saw, and I couldn't believe the stupidity of the people who elected him. I was stunned that this clown actually won, doing such a thing. I swear to you this is true, and you can use it in your column to make fun of him, if you haven't already.

That's how he started out!

And don't forget that his mentor is the author of the magic bullet bullshit theory of the infamous Warren Commission !

They are starting to come back on 15,315 MHz but I still don't here them on 17,735 MHz. I thought it would be the other way around. They are missing on 17,660 MHz also.

15315 is S9 at 1959.
17735 is S9+ at 1955.
17660 is S9+20 here at 1956.

At micro wave frequencies you might place pieces of lossy ferrite inside a module to absorb emitted radiation in order to dampen it so it would not propagate. Amusingly the wood might work in a similar way if it had enough water content. It would not work as well as the ferrite though so I don't expect to open any modules and find wood in them any time soon.

Yeah conditions are much better now. They are back on all three frequencies and like you 17,660 MHz out of Canada is best followed by the Antilles frequencies.
15315 is S8 at 20:05.
17660 is S9 at 20:05.
17735 is S6 at 20:05.

No you didn't (nor did I ever say you did), but you did respond to my

Normal logic would dictate that you reply to the original person that

First, "running their totals up" doesn't get you the QSL card. Next, you can't set up a sked with a DXpedition. You are competing with a howling mob of thousands! They don't do skeds and it's not about "running up your QSO totals". Your ignorance of ham dx'ing protocol is appalling. You have obviously never "busted a pile-up" in your life. Try it-you truly might enjoy the challenge (or at least then know whereof you speak).

Why would you have to or want to? Generally speaking (except for utes), they are already on a sked--daily, weekly, whatever. (BTW, I'm not saying that getting a 500 watt BC band daytimer from Timbuktu isn't a fine catch).
> By the way, I'm an amateur as well, and I can tell you which hobby aspect of radio > is more challenging.

Ham radio and SWL'ing are both fine hobbies and many people participate in both, myself included. It is highly subjective to say which is more challenging, both can be difficult. However, I would respectfully submit that with SWL'ing, you have to contend with, for lack of a better term, one "work operation"; i.e. hearing the station. For ham radio, you have to hear them first and then work them, two work operations. Plus you may not have another chance for years (see below), whereas "Radio Elbonia" (apologies to 'Dilbert') is generally there year around.

Furthermore, DXpeditions (where virtually all of the rare countries are worked), are usually only on the air for a week, give or take, and many times these DXpeditions, depending on scarcity (Pitcairn Island), remoteness (Heard Island), or the political climate du jour (North Korea), only get to the country every 10 or 15 years. So, the challenge is, you better figure out how to work them now, or be prepared for a long wait until your next chance comes along.

Bottom line, both hobbies can be very challenging and very rewarding...

Check out:

http://antiqueradio.org/dimbulb.htm

I'd eventually replace any paper capacitors in the radio. The paper deterioriates with time, and those caps won't be in much better shape than a 1950s era newspaper. I'd also test the resistors with an ohmmeter. Most of the resistors are probably still in spec, and a few will be close enough, but there are likely to some which have at least doubled their resistance. I'd also test the electrolytics and replace those which have high Equivalent Series Resistance or more than a normal amount of leakage at their rated voltage. Few old electrolytics pass both tests, and it's best to replace the electrolytics you can't test. Use decent replacement electrolytics, too. It's my opinion that alot of the inexpensive electrolytics are designed for today's disposable electronics. I also like to install fuses. A zener diode across the filament string will protect the battery tubes from overvoltages.

I know this all sounds like a major pain in the ass, but it's really no so bad. A properly repaired vacuum tube radio is both quite safe and reliable. But I'd never trust one with crummy old paper caps, leaky electrolytics, etc.

By the way, electrolytics usually fail by either drying up and developing a high ESR or simply opening up. Either way, they take themselves out of the circuit. This will result in a big hum in most radios, but it might simply silence these radios. Without the first electrolytic charging to near the peak of the AC waveform, both the B+ and the filament voltage go way below spec. Battery tubes don't work well with insufficent voltages.

Every once in a while I think about getting an antenna for MW DXing.
I've read that the Kiwa Loop is fantastic, but because MW isn't my primary interest, I can't see paying the hefty price for a Kiwa.

Not quite as expensive is the Quantum QX and QX Pro loops. I've heard that these are good, but how good are they, really? How would they compare to the Kiwa loop?

According to some George didn't do a thing since it's really Cheney who is in charge. And with regards to this flare I'm absolutely certain that Cheney is calling the shots on it from his secret bunker.

I can just see him there, hand on the joystick, evil grin on his face, zapping the planet with x-ray's.

MoveOn.Org Anti-John Roberts Ad Politicizes Katrina Victims

By Tina Sims
Sep 8, 2005

The left-wing advocacy group MoveOn.Org is set to run a campaign style commercial aimed at stopping federal Judge John Roberts' confirmation as chief justice. Mark Memmott of USA Today writes that the group will use televised images of "poverty-stricken evacuees from Hurricane Katrina" as part of a "provocative, last-minute effort" to derail Roberts' nomination.

No surprise there, liberals have attempted to exploit the victims of this tragedy since day one of the storm.

"The connection is obvious," Ben Brandzel, the group's advocacy director said. "The images after Hurricane Katrina show we still live in a society where significant racial inequities exist. We believe John Roberts' record on civil rights ... is clearly not the direction our country needs to head now."

Memo to MoveOn.Org: The images come from the liberal utopia of New Orleans.

New Orleans is run by Democrats, and the result is way too many people living in poverty waiting for their next government check. Black and white.

Liberalism and the results of the policies of that type of thinking are on full display in Louisiana and it's a sad picture.

MoveOn.Org will try to blame conservatives for that--but if yesterday's Gallup poll is accurate, they are only playing to the echo chamber of the sad, angry 13 percent.

That's not going to stop the Roberts' nomination, but I suspect the real goal is to raise more money from the angry left. (Soon to be re-named the angry 13%?)

"It is sickening that some in Washington would politicize a national tragedy," said Sean Rushton, executive director of the conservative group Committee for Justice.

Sickening indeed, but expected.

Some of y'all watch the talking heads tv news channels,I am watching Fox tv news now for a little while.Tell me this,how many obese fatsos have y'all seen in Mississippi when y'all are watching tv news? Did it strike y'all like a bolt out of the wild blue yonder? Did it have y'all thinking,Oh my gawd,look at all of those big fat obese fatso Mississippians.Have y'all been out shopping lately,did y'all see any people where y'all went in the stores or wherever whom are all nice and thin and did it make y'all stop and think,all Mississippians are obese fatsos!? y'all certanly do not see any obese fatsos where you live,now did y'all.Remember now,according to those fed govt phoney trumped up news sites,Mississippians are the fattest people in America.I just got back home from the annual Celticfest Mississippi Irish Festival thingy.I wasen't thinking about how obese and fat Mississippians are,but thinking about it now,I remember I did see a few obese fatsos over there at the Agricultural Museum grounds area and the other eight or ten other little museums over there.I estimate there were several hundred people over there and most of them were average size people and I did see quite a few thin people over there too.Mississippi,the Obese State!

That's right! And, now that the prices for diesel fuel are dropping,
Crico oil is more expensive.

Put enough curry in it and you can gag it down. Some people forget which way civilization lowed in this regard.

"If all society agrees on something, that is unhealthy".

I wonder where he thinks the passengers on the aircraft that hit the Pentagon went to.

Next week his paper will run an expose on why two and two equals five and hit out at people who have been agreeing with people who have been saying TWO and TWO is FOUR.

If the good Sheik believes in this wonderous logic, we must ask him to tell us what he believes in. Then when he tells us we must ask him if we and his followers are MORE healthy if we do not agree with his beliefs or LESS healthy if we believe what he believes.

This wonderous logic has nothing to do with the ISLAMIC religion. I believe it has a lot to do with BIGOTED RADICALS from all political colours and this logic normally comes from SAD and DESPERATE men who have LOST their way and I also believe LOST their God.

I wonder how www.ddaymuseum.org and www.confederate.com held up in the New Orleans area? I wonder why I forgot about the Irish Whiskey tasting thingy at Celticfest Mississippi (maybe it is because I don't drink and drive) www.celticfestms.org and bought that d..n $3.00 hamburger instead? I did buy a Celticfest Mississippi T Shirt for $15.00 for that married Irish woman wayyyyy over yonder across the big pond and I did take a lot of pictures (two film cartridges worth of pictures) with my Kodak Advantix F600 camera too.Overall,I enjoyed the whole shebang.

Pastor Peters is now broadcasting over WWCR over 400 hours per month - having taken much of the time which Bro. Stair gave up.

There are too many times and frequencies to list here but they can be found at http://scripturesforamerica.org/

A few of the frequencies to check are 5.765 7.465 5.070 12.160 9.985 9.975 Most of his time is on transmitter #4 in case you go to WWCR.com to check the transmitter schedules.

Right now he's on 7.465.

His WWCR times are about 13 hours per day five days a week and all day Saturday and Sunday.

You have no need to, or excuse for, judging him on the basis of any person's or organization's word. Tune him in and hear it from his own mouth.

Right this minute 8:13 PM EDT / 00:13 UTC he has a guest on discussing WHITE slavery in the U.S.

Oh, I haven't been "lurking" lately. Occasionally, believe it not, I have other things to do. :-)

New Orleans is an old City.I don't know how old the Levees are.How many times before since the Levees were first built have they been breached before either by forces of Nature or otherwise? By that,I mean breached as in busted open.Last night,I read an article at www.bellaciao.org which said a Barge (Barge Boat) had been rammed into the Levee on purpose.I don't know about that though.The whole thing smells awfully (no puns,please) fishey to me.

I once heard a presentation by an HR educator. Someeone in the session asked why you had to fill out all that stuff on the app. The answer, as you say, was that you have to sign it. So years later, when you piss someone off, they pull it and go over it with a fine-toothed comb. They'll find cause for dismissal in nearly all of them. I once saw it happen to a guy who'd been on the job eight years.

In any case, an HR manager who can't find a reason to disqualify any randomly chosen applicant just doesn't under stand his/her job.

Just like the hypocrite Ronald Reagan said, "Taxes SHOULD hurt" in the same year as he personally paid ZERO taxes due to "paper

A quick, random sampling:

One ambulance official overseeing the airlift rescue operations said a gunshot was fired at a military helicopter over the Superdome before daybreak.

"We have suspended operations until they gain control of the Superdome," said Richard Zeuschlag, head of Acadian Ambulance, which was handling the evacuation of sick and injured people from the building.
xxx.foxnews.com
Friday, September 02, 2005

But some Federal Emergency Management rescue operations were suspended in areas where gunfire has broken out, Homeland Security spokesman Russ Knocke said in Washington.
ï¿½In areas where our employees have been determined to potentially be in danger, we have pulled back,ï¿½ he said.
ï¿½Hospitals are trying to evacuate,ï¿½ said Coast Guard Lt Cmdr Cheri Ben-Iesan, spokesman at the city emergency operations centre. ï¿½At every one of them, there are reports that as the helicopters come in people are shooting at them. There are people just taking pot-shots at police and at helicopters, telling them: ï¿½You better come get my familyï¿½.ï¿½

But the ambulance service in charge of taking the sick and injured from the Superdome suspended flights after a shot was reported fired at a military helicopter. Richard Zuschlag, chief of Acadian Ambulance, said it had become too dangerous for his pilots.
The military, which was overseeing the removal of the able-bodied by buses, continued the ground evacuation without interruption, said National Guard Lt Col Pete Schneider.
The government had no immediate confirmation of whether a military helicopter was fired on.

Looks to me like the media was reporting what officials were saying. Ditto with the slow relief efforts - quotes from officials, victims. Criminal? Blame the messenger? Hell, you're accusing the messengers of crimes. How disingenuous. The media is where you get all your information, whether it be "liberal", "mainstream", "alternative" or "conservative" media. You must feel really stupid.

I never heard Australia on 21,740 today and currently I don't hear them on 17,795 and just barely getting them on 17,715 MHz.

Having owned both, I would say the QX Pro and the Kiwa are a toss up, the QX Pro having the edge for LF reception. The nulls seem to be slightly better for the QX Pro on MW. The Standard QX Loop has a smaller head (shorter ferrite bars) and is not as effective on weak MW stations as the Kiwa and QX Pro. The price for the QX Pro is attractive vs. the going E-Pay prices for the Kiwa.

Hey man, I bought a Kloss Model 2 not long ago. The sound it great.
But like the CC radios, why couldn't they make a all mode radio with SSB.

Their putting too much effort on sound and not other important areas of a radio. Sound becomes more important for music. They should try and re-introduce SWL listening to the next generation!

Also you might consider that he was the first Texas Governor to be elected to two consecutive terms and then of course being elected twice as the President of The United States of America.

I'd say that was pretty darn successful!

I'm fairly certain that others opinions may vary, but then of course those would be the opinions of 'tards, so what the hell do I care.

Hmmm, when you said victims and 9/11 I thought you meant the dead bodies.
As I recall, victims (those that survived 9/11) were shown on conservative and liberal tv stations. And the victims (refugees) are on liberal and conservative tv. So I don't think you have a point there.

Thanks to all for the help in choosing a radio for my Dad.
Your time is appreciated.
Circuit City online ordered 500- 50 dollar savings online free shipping.
Called a lot of stores and none had any but there are units left in warehouse, 1 less now.
Will let you know how it does in about 3 weeks...

Thanks again

Tom

How many know how to drive a school bus? How would they know where to go?
Couldn't a volunteer from the Superdome have been one of those violent types, and took the people somewhere to kill them and rape the children?

Still seems that 13,000 is an awful of people to find shelter for. And would those places be supplied with food and water, any more so than where they were?

If help is measured in calendar years, I could see that.

I'm sure the victims all appreciate that.

The Superdome was not a bad idea for a place to house those seeking refuge.
They are housing them in the Astrodome now, so it's not like irt couldn't be done. The problem I believe came when the floods started and there was no easy way for the locals to get relief there. There seemed to be a shortage of security and supplies.

Wasn't that the plan though? If you could get out on your own, then do so.
I guess I don't understand why there's a Dept. of Homeland Security though.
If a terrorist broke a levee open would this be how the Feds, who are supposed to be taking care of this type thing, be reacting?

I don't recall Clinton going to war with Iraq over WMD. Maybe you can tell me when that was. I don't recall anyone of those people being aware that the whole Niger and Uranium connection being false information. Powell gave his speech that we all heard amd all felt was made with high amount of certainty. So if Kennedy and Kerry were led to believe it, just as we all were, how can they be faulted. Now we know that the information was bogus, and people knew it was bogus but didn't speak up for some reason (probably so they wouldn't get canned).

It's a war that would have never happened if the truth was told. Now a lot of citizens are resentful of their government lying to them and getting their kids killed because of it.

If they had faith in Brown he wouldn't be back at Washington after the biggest natural disaster to date. I bet we see his resignation within a week or two. Bush will of course say what a great guy Brownie is.

Does anybody know how to take this thing apart? I just picked up one of these units. It has that dreaded "howling audio with low system gain" problem for the first 10 minutes of operation.
The 100uF 10V bypass cap that is across the 8V line is bad (why did they use an electrolytic cap this close to its rated limits in the first place?).
Anyway, I got to compare this receiver with my HF-150 and HF-225.
The 150 is the most sensitive, the 225 is next, and the 250 follows by a close third place. With the preamplifier engaged, the 250 falls into second place.
Measurements were made using a Boonton Model 103D RF generator.
If I could figure out how to get the 250 apart, the repair is a ten minute job. Nice receiver, good build quality.

Getting better all the time! When it was just one or two cars doing it, the chances were nil. But now there are websites dedicated to running SVO, or biodiesel. The legislature in MD, for one, had already addressed the issue, and will be taxing biodiesel in all forms.

Considering that the fine is in the thousands of dollars, it might be important to you if you decide to run SVO, or off road diesel.

The British police do carry guns, but only specially trained officers not every rookie cop. Unlike the US and although gun crime in the UK is growing were nowhere near in as much trouble as to need every officer to be gun bearing.. and what was that i heard on the news.... supermarkets were robbed of their guns by looters..... supermarkets sell guns ???? what sort of crazy shit is that?? youll be giving them away free with every box of bran flakes next ;o)

Being perfectly honest which restaraunts have you tried in the UK?? Some pub grub can be amazing but it depends where you are, like anything. Ive had pub grub you wouldnt want to look at never mind eat and other places it was well tasty. I know some of the restaraunts in London you would need a stomach pump afterwards or a hospital stay ..
As for Tea, you cant beat a nice hot cup with one sugar and milk. Coffee's ok too but i tend to drink tea at home and coffee at work. As for serving cold tea with ice and sugar and fruit, ive never tried it but you couldnt really describe that as a pot of Tea Theres also some very nice sandwich bars too which specialises in all sorts of sandwiches and french sticks..etc... its just a matter of where youve visited..

If you ever get to Birmingham on your travels try one of the Balti Houses.... they can be excellent. Look at it first though and make sure in your mind it looks a clean well run place... you know what these foriegners are like ;o)

Never had cold toast in a rack... ive always eaten mine hot.... Thereagain, tea should be served Hot in a Pot not cold in a glass... we all do things slightly different to each other. Being brought up one way doesnt mean the other way is wrong... pancakes should have lemon and sugar on them not maple syrup... we could go on...

Americans enslaved blacks and nearly wiped out the Native Americans because they wanted to take the land... the wars with the north and south, confederates and yankies were some of the nastiest and uncivilised conflicts in your history and you were well established as Americans at that time and

Have a look

So i would say yes indeed. I can imagine both these to be expensive to use

''President Bush knew the storm and its consequences had been bad; but he didn't quite realize how bad.

The reality, say several aides who did not wish to be quoted because it might displease the president, did not really sink in until Thursday night. Some White House staffers were watching the evening news and thought the president needed to see the horrific reports coming out of New Orleans. Counselor Bartlett made up a DVD of the newscasts so Bush could see them in their entirety as he flew down to the Gulf Coast the next morning on Air Force One.

How this could beï¿½how the president of the United States could have even less "situational awareness," as they say in the military, than the average American about the worst natural disaster in a centuryï¿½is one of the more perplexing and troubling chapters in a story that, despite moments of heroism and acts of great generosity, ranks as a national disgrace.''

Hi Tom

I have the E1 for about 1 month now. I think it's a fantastic portable even though I don't use it as such. Too expensive for me to take out and carry around. But for those with a back yard, it's superb. Hard to beat but you do pay a nice price for it but it's well worth it.

I think you'll love it. Yes, please get back to us with your opinion and observations. I'm very curious as to what others think about this radio. So far, almost everyone who buys one only have good words to say about it. In fact, I haven't heard any real bad opinions about it. A few beefs like my own, no carrying handle.

This is one reason I don't take it out. I want something secure to carry it by not just under my arm and that's it.

But as far as the main features of the radio, all love it.

Enjoy yours and get back to us
Lucky

Nobody hit the roof, Brian. I enjoy your radio-related posts, and you seem like a genuinely good guy. My point is, I'd hate to see you become like the paranoiac, delusional, political loonies that infest this group. Your post had more than a little bit of that tone in it.

I assure you that your involvement in the radio hobby is far greater than mine. I had a novice license in the early '70s, and never went any further than that in ham radio. Nowadays, I listen primarily to utility stuff via a couple of little Radio Shack portables. Just about anybody here is more into radio than I am. A rough reconstruction of the flooding based on anecdotal accounts, interviews, and computer modeling, shows that the huge scale of the overlapping floods ï¿½ one fast, one slow ï¿½ should have been clear to some officials by mid-afternoon Monday, when city representatives confirmed that the 17th Street canal floodwall had been breached.

At that point areas to the east were submerged from the earlier flooding, trapping thousands, while gradually rising waters stretched from the Lakefront across to Mid City and almost to the Central Business District.

Federal officials have referred to the levee breaches as a separate and much later event from the flooding to the east, and said that they were unaware of the gravity of the problem until Tuesday, suggesting valuable response time was lost.

ï¿½It was midday Tuesday that I became aware of the fact that there was no possibility of plugging the (17th Street canal) gap and that essentially the lake was going to start to drain into the city. I think that second catastrophe really caught everybody by surprise,ï¿½ Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff said Sunday, adding that he believed the breach had occurred Monday night or Tuesday morning. By that time, flooding from at least one of the two breached canals already had been under way all day Monday, evidence shows.

Even on Tuesday, as still-rising waters covered most of New Orleans, FEMA official Bill Lokey sounded a reassuring note in a Baton Rouge briefing.

ï¿½I don't want to alarm everybody that, you know, New Orleans is filling up like a bowl,ï¿½ Lokey said. ï¿½That's just not happening.ï¿½

Once a levee or floodwall is breached by a hurricane storm surge, engineers say, it often widens and cannot be quickly sealed. Storm surge waters in Lake Pontchartrain may take a day or more to subside, so they keep pouring into the city ï¿½ most of which lies below sea level ï¿½ until the levels inside and outside the levee are equal.

Experts familiar with the hurricane risks in the New Orleans area said they were stunned that no one had conveyed the information about the breaches or made clear to upper-level officials the grave risk they posed, or made an effort to warn residents about the threat after storm winds subsided Monday afternoon.

ï¿½Iï¿½m shocked. I donï¿½t understand why the response wasnï¿½t instantaneous,ï¿½ said Louisiana State University geology professor Greg Stone, who studies coastal storm surge dynamics.

ï¿½They should have been monitoring this and informed people all the way to the top, (and) then they should have warned people,ï¿½ said Ivor Van Heerden, who uses computer models at the LSU Hurricane Center to study storm surges and provided officials in the Louisiana Office of Emergency Preparedness headquarters with data indicating the potential for flooding that could result from Katrina.

Flying in firefighters for a photo op? That is OBSCENE. Only a dxAce can explain how that is a good and proper way for a President to behave.

Mind you,the ex Canadian Prime Minister, Chretien, did something almost as ugly. He flew to Winnipeg, Manitoba during the '97 flood there in order to place a token sandbag.

Really. Any thinking person has to realize that help is probably not going to materialize instantaneously from outside the affected area of any disaster.

It's up to the folks right there on the scene to have a effective plan, and be able to put that plan into place to be able to weather the storm (no pun intended) until additional help can arrive.

As I recall it, they were warned in the past that Federal help may not arrive for several days. They did not heed that warning.

Then they should have done MORE prior to the storm, 'tard boy, instead of sitting around picking their dingle-berry's like the typical liberal shitstains that they are waiting for someone else to come along and bail (no pun intended) them out.

It's NOT FEMA's job PRIOR to the storm, shit-for-brains, it's FEMA's job to come in AFTER a disaster or catastrophe. Prior to the storm or catastrophe it's up to local or State government to handle their own damn affairs.

Actually, different tribes were constantly fighting, and took slaves when they didn't just kill them. Later, they discovered that they could sell or trade their slaves for things that they wanted with the ships that arrived on the African coast to trade goods. A lot of those ships were from England, and they took the slaves to other places to sell them.

When it is in a public place and out in the open and they stop people from getting within a half mile because they are not a card carrying republican is wrong. It was because he didn't want to answer any questions, except those that his "Plants" asked. How can you call that a "Rally"?

Open public appearances in public places shouldn't be, and as far as I was able to find out the one in "The Villages" was NOT a fund raiser. It was supposed to show that the entire country was behind his actions in IRAQ. Since "The Villages" is 95% retired republicans, he wanted to keep the other 5% away, even though it was a couple blocks from their homes. Not only that, but most of the people in "The Villages are only worried about play golf on their private golf courses and the women have a number of different exclusive "Residents only" groups. It sits on the corners of three counties and is larger than some of the towns close to it. I doubt that you have ever seen a place quite like it.

Pete - I took one apart a few years ago to fix a remote sensor problem and it was a real pain to figure out but I finally did it. Unfortunately I forgot the details! You may have noticed that the 250 just uses the 225 RF/IF circuit board with a different digital/uP board.

No wonder they don't eat doughnuts. They are too busy looking for the perp who is going to kill them while they are not permitted to protect themselves. They are so nervous they can't hold on to a nice, big doughnuts and cup of hot coffee without dropping the doughnuts and getting coffee all over their uniforms.

I have NEVER seen any guns or ammunition for sale in any supermarket in any state that I have been in. That is as stupid as a gun store selling doughnuts.

On the other hand, some Wal-Mart department stores do sell guns and their super stores do sell food, but that still isn't a "Supermarket selling guns" and several Wal-Mart stores were looted in New Orleans.

Service is always expensive due to parts and labor costs and shipping the product back and forth.

1. Labor to effect repair, troubleshooting and replacement of components.
2. Parts and the associated costs of stocking parts.
3. Test equipment, calibrating the test equipment.
4. QA final testing the product to meet specifications.
5. Management costs.
6. Shipping and boxing.

Lots of ways to spend money to support repairing a product.

So Michael, the point you make here is that the different tribes in America were already into slavery and used them to barter with the English for goods and suchlike therefore making my point that slavery wasnt a result of the good old British Colonies... They may have been involved in the transportation of slaves for profilt but that wasnt the point. The previous post said, or tried to imply it was the British Colonies that introduced slavery where that simply wasnt the case.

Also most of the slaves who ended up in Britain werent treated quite as badly in comparison although they probably didnt think so at the time.

Anyhows this has lead a little off topic as so many threads do, but its nice to actually have a converstaion about things rather than cheap insults.
Thank you..

LOL, the british police are armed, we have special armed forces that are normally used in terrorist or gun related crimes but no.. the average PC plod has his telescopic baton (oooh err matron) handcuffs (Kinky) and a can of CS spray which he is a bit worried about using in case he gets sued...The donut reference i think is solely a US thing as ours eat a nice bacon sarnie while pounding the beat with children mocking them.
Mind you, that said most of our traffic police are being replaced by Gatso cameras to make huge amounts of revenue from the poor sods who dare go a couple of miles over a far too slow speed limit... but thats another gripe....

The Sony sounds OK. Where do people get the idea that it does not sound good? If you park yourself front and center of the 3 1/8 inch speaker the sound is what you would expect to get. If you want better use headphones or ear buds. You also get stereo with the headphones.

The web does not tell you what the speaker size is in the Grundig 400PE or E10 or E100 but judging from the case sizes those have about the same size speakers or smaller.

I have played with the Grundig 400PE in the store and it didn't sound much different to me than the Sony. What do you expect for a small speaker in a plastic box anyway?

Hi Frank,

It looks as if the top panel is just pressure-fitted in place. If I remove the control knobs and remove the two Allen head screws, the front panel should pop off. After this happens, the top panel might just slide off.
I thought this was just a repackaged 225 with a pretty face. Oh well.....now I will have a small collection of Lowe receivers once I get done with this one. The only ones I won't have will be the 125 and the 235, but this covers the general spectrum of Lowe receivers.
That white version of the 150 was pretty cool looking. Thanks for the info.....as long as I've got it apart, I will check the oscillator calibration. I would be willing to bet that the test mode is very similar to the other Lowe units.

The off topic loonies of which the political posts comprise a great deal of it is about 2/3'rds of the posts. I don't see that changing unless someone goes after them.

You expect people to go off topic occasionally but there is a small group people here that posts off topic all the time or very close to it.

Your level of involvement in short wave is not the issue it's what you

You would actually compare flagrant violations of the Constitution with having semi-private gatherings?

Yes, what you attribute to Bush is MUCH better.

Look this is a very important event but it does not belong in this news group. This event is over and yet you keep posting one article after another about it. It's time to stop. If you feel the need to continue to post about this then find another news group or find a way to associate it with SW such as the posts about the WWL AMBCB station being rebroadcast by World Harvest Radio as an example.

These post just incite the Trolls in the news group. Let the Trolling idiots find their own off topic items to argue about.

I got next to nothing for two hours last night (1-3 AM CDT) from KMOX here in the Chicago area, between some QRN I can't explain or find the source of and weak signals. Shoulda thought to try WWL but didn't; they're usually strong here.

I finally got the unit apart.....once you loosen up the front panel and slide it out a bit you can carefully insert a small screwdriver into the slot that runs along the back of the top panel. It is a press-fit. I've got the bottom panel off.....off the Radio Shack to buy a couple of 100uF caps!
You were correct Frank.....this receiver uses the same board as my HF-225.

WWL put in a very nice signal here last night. I fell asleep listening to it on the bedside radio and woke up to it still coming in well at about 6:30 AM.

Yes. There is a concurrent geomagnetic storm along the solar radiation events.

The X ray trend today is down from yesterday but still high.

You are such a fucking horse's ass.

Who else has the required number of helicopters to respond in a timely manner to a hurricane? The locals don't. The military does.

The military could not move because George Bush did not give the order.

That's the fact Jack.

Face it, you just plain don't know much about anything and have been reduced to grasping at straws.

It's both hilarious and boggling.

What is funny is that you and some others here seem to be just as stupid as the dumb ass liberals who run Louisiana, and that acts as a constant reminder to everyone else as to why liberalism needs to be smashed.

Pastor Peters on over 400 hrs / Month -- there are 168 hours in a week (24x7 = 168).
The 168 hours / week is seldom mentioned in radio broadcasting, except in International Broadcasting -- where relay stations run 24 hours / day serving different target zones.

Very poor reception this morning (1200 UTC). Had rain all last night and into today, unplugged the radios due to lightening last night. Nothing received at all in SW, all bands this a.m. Brightening up this afternoon, I can hear the usual spanish scattered around the lower bands.

Wow! Really? Damn! Gee! Golly! Whee! Yay!

I'm certain there were vast numbers of folks up in CanaDuh who were just waiting for some genius to finally figure out just how many hours there are in a week.

Read for comprehension -- he said, "ships that arrived on the Reception is absolutely abyssmal here in Edmonton. I can barely hear WWV on 10 MHz and that's all I can hear. All my usual hallmarks for reception are in the noise. That'll teach me to live at a relatively northerly latitude.

They said it was beyond their capabilities before the storm struck.

The President has the power to order any Federal agency into a major disaster area any time he wants.

The USCG was flying helicopters Monday afternoon. The scope of the disaster was known to the Federal government while the storm was still exiting the area.

I currently own both the the KIWA and Quantum QX Pro. My experience using these antennas parallels Les Locklear's experience but there are some differences that, in my opinion, make the QX Pro slightly better than the KIWA. I find that the QX Pro doesn't overload on strong local MW signals whereas my KIWA would often create a harmonic or mixing product on a strong local signal. The QX Pro has some useful functions that the KIWA doesn't have such a q-spoil control and attachment site for a longwire antenna that allows full utilization of all the Pro's controls. This makes a world of difference since I like to try phasing signals to see if that gets me the best possible reception.

Your mileage may vary when pitting these 2 antennas against each other. They are both excellent antennas but if cost is a factor then go with the QX Pro.

If you think the above items, contended to be facts, have been spun, twisted, are lies or are fabricated, please use your intelligence to explain why you think they are not correct. Unless you can disprove those statements above, you are just a blowhard.

Most people here realize name calling doesn't disprove facts; it just puts your ignorance on public display.

Now toddle along, dust off your Magic 8 Ball and come up with more of

It is the states responsibility to first assess the damage and need, then go to the Federal agencies if they need to. After all, they are where the emergency is, Washington isn't. In the case of NO, the Governor of LA and they Mayor of NO were derelict in their duties and failed to act in a timely manner to the situation. Many lives may have been saved it they had called in the Federal agencies sooner.

I forgot how confused you get. Let me simplify: The media wasn't spreading rumors. They were reporting what officials were saying. There is a difference. Rescue and evacuations were being suspended and people were asking why (oh, the temerity of some people!). Officials on the ground were saying it was because the helicopters were being shot at.

Can you hear me now?

Yes I agree Telamon. A good service bureau is an expensive proposition. The ones I am familiar with (industrial based) barely break even after salaries are paid. The important thing here is that somebody is getting paid a salary. I would think the consumer market is even worse. I suppose that is why so many mom & pop tv radio shops are gone now. It's a shame.

If there were a demand for the mom and pop repair shops they would still be around. However radios and TVs no longer need to have tubes replaced on a regular basis. Without that business there is little for them to do. Combine that with generally decreasing prices for electronic products and it becomes advantagous for folks to replace rather than repair.

1965,brand spanking new wooden cabinet 21 inch screen Zenith tv set.(it is a heavy tv set too,it is sitting on the floor in my front bedroom/junkroom right now,long since unused,it still gets a picture though,but barely) I took that tv set to Wink Radio & TV Repair shop on Capitol Street more times than I care to remember.(They put some sort of a tv tube brightner thingy on the back of the tube,I think) Every once in a while,it got to where I was taking it back for some sort of a repair job.From that point on,I swore off of buying anything new that has the Zenith brand name on it.RCA is the Worlds best tv sets,in my opinion.I am useing a 27 inch screen RCA tv set now for my webtv.I bought it brand new at a Wal Mart store wayyyyy out on Lakeland Drive in Jackson on October 15,1999 and it is still working just as good as new with nearly thirty nine thousand hours of use on it,according to the tv set's Menu thingy I checked about a week ago.I have owned RCA tv sets before and never once did I have any problems at all with them compared to that Zenith tv set other than they just got old and worn out.Me,buy another new Zenith anything again? It ain't gonna happen,babes,it ain't Never gonna happen! I am planning on buying a new CRT HDTVtv set next year from one of Cowboy Maloney's Electric City stores in Jackson and it will be an RCA.RCA all the way.I am not interested in any other brand names of tv sets.

Doesn't the "DX/Local" switch on the Kiwa preamp box (on the loop) work this way? I haven't tested it using a phaser yet, but in the local setting the preamp introduces some degenerative feedback, and it really opens up the loop's bandwidth.

If you've a phaser handy, does this sufficiently spoil the loop Q enough to work with the Kiwa into it?

Could you test it?

I agree. When I was knee-high (mid fifties) TV repair shops were swamped with work, and many "8 to 4:30" guys studied nights to learn TV repair, and made it into a lucrative sideline. The original TV chassis (save the Muntz, for one) had around 32 tubes on the board besides the CRT. They were in the shop three, sometimes four times a year as a matter of course, as they slowly cooked themselves to death. People accepted it as part of the miracle of "pictures through the air".
Madman Muntz designed a 17 tube chassis (some double duty some cut corners) and they were very reliable sets - maybe into the shop once or twice a year (we had one for years).

Craig M is right - Assuming they pass the "infant mortality" stage, todays electronics last about exactly as long as it takes for people to want a new one - for better features or whatever reason.

Tony

Well, remember the $25.00 per quarter hour does not go to a lone tech working out of his basement. Also the alternative, a new radio is far more money.

My guess is that 'nominal' performance is all it's capable of even under ideal conditions.

It's a fairly easy fix and if you can do it yourself I'd recommend that as a start, as it's not difficult to do as long as one feels comfortable about tearing into the receiver.

The part is available from Drake and perhaps from other sources as well.

As for determining if there are other issues with the radio perhaps you might compare reception with any other equipment you might have.

Then if there are problems you might send it in to Drake.

Some training. Don't get ID. Take a leak instead of watching your

I own both, and find the Kiwa to be better for MW. The nulls seem sharper and the ability to tilt the loop (I think it's called azimuth?) helps in nulling skywaves. The QX-PRO is smaller, thus easier to find a spot for. The Kiwa doesn't receive LW, so of course the QX-PRO has the LW advantage. Both are great antennas and you can't go wrong with either one.

If memory serves, neither are manufactured any more.

Back then TV sets were very expensive and not particularly reliable. Tubes went out, tuners needed cleaning and the early color sets seemed to need frequent realigning. A TV nice TV set with far more features than the sets of the 1950's costs a lot less and is highly reliable. When a new CRT set finally does die the replacement cost is usually equal to the price of a new one.

Does anyone know if there are repair shops for the still pricey plasma and lcd sets?

Well, now we are down to opinion.

1) The American public was told we were going to war primarily for "Reason A" and "Reason B".

2) Powell then admitted that both reasons A & B were not true.

3) Ergo, there is no reason for the war.

Many Americans and the media smelled a rat long ago (along with several million other people throughout the world) but this was the first time a high level official/key player/one who was there/ a member of the inner sanctum, actually confirmed it. (to answer someone's previous snipe, that's what makes it big news--maybe "everyone knew it" before, but this is the first time a very high level insider admitted it).

As to "the intelligence was flawed", I'm beginning to wonder if Powell is being just a wee bit disingenuous and using the Sgt. Schultz defense--("I know nossing, I see nossing") a la Scrushy, Ebbers, Kenny-boy Lay, et al.

Powell is a very intelligent man, possibly bordering on brilliant, he was a key war player, probably one of the war's architects (or at least certainly closely associated with them), member of the inner circle and the point man of and for the war.

Now, he wants us to believe that he was a poor little naive babe in the woods that was sold a bill of goods--like he went from brilliant to stupid overnight. A battle seasoned General, a figure that loomed large on the world stage as a very high level politician and we get "Oh, boo-hoo. Poor me. The CIA snookered poor little naive me". Welll...maybe so... or not... or just trying to back-peddle and cover his ass.

Dont forget to short out that crazy 1K, 1W resistor that's part of the internal speaker circuit where the speaker is driven through an electolytic cap back to the + raw Vcc. I have no idea what this was all about but you had to have a regulated supply or the unit would hum due to any ripple on the raw Vcc.. Note that when an external speaker is plugged in the circuit is now wired correctly to a real ground and no hum from a non-regulated wall wart. I had to do this on both of the HF-225s I had. I've yet to figure what Lowe was trying to do here.

Plus, if they hold true to what they used to do, they charge you for a new box to ship it back to you in.

I never could figure that one out but they always said it was for insurence purposes.

Thanks Frank.....I didn't notice that resistor, but I've always used regulated supplies on the radios. Probably why I didn't notice it. I never was crazy about the internal speakers so I use a Minimus 7 on all of my receivers.
Overall, it seems to be a good receiver. They are using what appears to be a Bourns optical encoder. I am going to look at the schematic tomorrow and see what they did differently and eventually change the encoders in my other Lowe receivers to optical types. I think all I need to do is connect a decoupled source of 5V to the encoder and remove the pullup resistors from the Channel A and B tuning lines. If I remember correctly, there may be a couple of series diodes in the tuning lines.
This receiver reminds me quite a bit of the AOR7030.....it will be a keeper. I might sell or trade off the HF-225 if the right deal comes along.....not quite yet, though.

Satellite radio would have been an okay idea about 15 years ago. Now there are better, cheaper, and more effective alternatives.

How dire is dire? The local officials were still there on the ground weren't they?
They weren't all dead, and the city and state left without leadership were they?

The local leadership (if one chooses to refer to it as such) was still in place to grant authorization, and I maintain that if the Feds went in without that then you slobbering liberals would simply have had something else to whine about, now wouldn't you?

As I've said before, nothing can be done that will make you happy, nothing.

That he had WMD, Bush offered that Saddam and Iraq were an immediate threat to us. You take away the WMD part, and the claim that Iraq is an immediate threat is gone. If they aren't an immediate threat, then there are a lot more options than going to war so quickly. So you may believe the rest of the claims, but we would not be there now if WMD had not been a part of the equation. The fact the Powell hammered home over and over all this "proof" of WMD makes you realize how it was critical to the argument for war.

Maybe it wasn't a lie. But it's like claiming you didn't know it was against the law to spit in public, but it's just because you didn't care to find out. Bush and others glossed over any details, did not thoroughly question sourcse and facts, and went as far as stretching the truth about Niger. You want to go to war, you better have your ducks lined up. So we went anyway, and guess what, there were no WMD found. Hans Blix knew it. Too bad we didn't listen. That Iraq may have had a connection to terrorists. Even if that was the case, there are several other countries that easily fir that description, but none of them were invaded. And that does not mean we have an immediate threat either.

Quickly? How many times did Iraq violate the cease fire agreement? The no fly zone, etc., etc.

I don't know. I use both. In fact, iPod in the car is a lot easier to do cleanly than most people realize. If you do a search for iPod and Car you'll find a spectrum of adaptors that will permit you to hardwire your iPod into your factory sound system, and control your iPod from the radio face.

Pretty handy, and sounds a lot better than the common FM modulators, and cassette adaptors. It's also a cleaner installation. Toss the iPod in the glove box and let the tunes wail. Belkin makes an iPod mount that fits in a cup holder, if that's something that's important.

I use iPod2Car. But there are a number of similar adaptors, for less than $200.

I"m working on an adaptor that will control my iPod from the face of my Becker 2340. AM/FM/Shortwave AND iPod all from one installation in the dash.

No one had to ask us if we needed money or help. The Germans had planes on the way with supplies. Other countries just donated money. It it's a horrific disaster which requires no though as to if help was needed, but instead how quickly could help be given.

The British ships that arrived on the US coast wanted cotton to take to England. That is where they finally got paid. Then they restocked the ship with goods for Africa and repeated the cycle. All they had when they arrived on the shores of the US to trade their cargo was a ship load of slaves and a few manufactured goods from England. They traded both of them for cotton.

Only an idiot would mistreat any worker that was doing their best.
After all, if you kill all the help you won't make enough money to live, will you? And then there were "Indentured servants" who traded a number of years or labor for passage to the US, and were basically slaves during that time. Legally they were the property of whoever paid their way, till their time was up.

I never said I approved of any slavery. On the other hand there were people of every race who were held in slavery at one time or another throughout the history of mankind, and this still doesn't make it right at any time.

Point is, we didn't have to ask for help. It was being given without us.
We didn't ask for help and then the other countries took us up on our offer.

Where is this magical place that they were supposed to go to? You talk about it being a local problem, but this storm affected many states. You can't say it's a state problem, when the state has no place to put them and they have to drive to another one. Then it becomes a national problem.

Where a few miles outside the city? Did you maybe think that the places just outside the city were already being used? When Florida get's hit by a Hurricane, they don't just trravel a few miles, many travel into Georgia and further North.

The no fly zone was a UN backed area. Remember how we disregarded the UN

the UN no fly zone, then be a part of the UN and work within the system.

How could a communist country allow the public to have access to a shortwave radio. Although Hong Kong was under the Brits.

As for the way the radio looks. It seem to have that portable 70's look. The radio can be sneaked around without much notice.

Even a very cheep radio qualifies for bring outside information.

Get it?

No, it's over your head. If you see an accident on the road and there's a car fire and people are stuck in there dying, do you wait for them to ask for your help? No, you go over and help them. What the fuck is wrong with your mind? We didn't need to ask. Many countries were ready and willing to be here. They saw the disaster and decided to help because it was so obvious. The only ones it wasn't obvious to was our own fucking Federal government. How is it that other countries were ready to help and we weren't? It's a disgrace. We can go help fucking Iraqis but screw our own. Let's save us from those terrorists with the imaginary WMD, but it's ok that they die from a hurricane. Fucking ridiculous.

Sheesh, I have picked up 6 this year at my flea market for $5-10 a piece in mint condition. Ok, I got NO boxes with them. I guess they are worthless..

Yep. The UN is inept and gets nothing done but passing meaningless resolutions.
You seem to have nothing against going it alone when it comes to states rights, so why should you really care if we go it alone in Iraq?

Don't forget your UN, 'tard boy. At that time things were going fairly well. We stuck with the UN in regards to the cease fire, and the reasons to go to war at the time. The agreement was to get Saddam out of Kuwait. We did that.

Later of course Saddam was violating the cease fire agreement, repeatedly. He violated the no fly zones, repeatedly, etc., etc.

The UN passed resolution after resolution, doing nothing. Someone had to act!

And that someone was President Bush!

It's like your arguement with the states regarding dire circumstances. In this case there was no leadership from the UN, only meaningless paper shuffling.

AFAIK Bush didn't say the FEMA response was inadequate. FEMA was there, but they couldn't overrule Nagin and invade the city with aid, nor could they endanger their people with armed rowdies shooting at the helos.

Nagin kept all the aid out of NOLA so the residents would all leave.

Marion County, Florida neglected to ask for help after one of the hurricanes last year ands it caused all kinds of problems for the people affected by the hurricane. They "forgot" to request for the area to be declared a federal disaster area.

Yes, there were a lot of "Tube changers" out there who called themselves TV repairmen. At one time there were over 50 so called "TV shops in Middletown Ohio. Only a few could really troubleshoot a TV set with real problems, and they were the ones who were in business till a few years ago. Now, there isn't one shop left in a town of over 50,000 people. In the '70s it cost around 10,000 to equip a van for TV service calls, unless all you did was pick up the TV and haul it to the shop for the bench techs to work on. I ran some TV shops in the late '70s and saw the costs. It was over $100 in taxes and insurance just to open the doors of a shop that didn't have a mortgage or rent payment. Then you had to make enough money to pay the wages, buy parts, pay for the phone and gasoline. Basically, you had to take in about 300 a day to keep the doors open, and a TV service call was $17.50, for the trip and first half hour, plus 17.50 per hour after that.

We weren't ready. Supplies, troops, vehicles were all still in-transit during the third day. They had a week to be ready, and to even put people on the ground before the storm and they didn't.

Sure, fault the Mayor and Gov, but FEMA was no where to be found in the city when it was obvious the storm would hit.

But let's go play soldier in Iraq for Bush's war. It certainly isn't our war. Well, only in the sense that our kids are dying for him. Bush attracts death and devastaion. 9/11, Iraq and now Katrina.

Let's go fre the Iraqi's but screw our own.

Actually they care when the President lies under oath, not whether he has a sex life.

Clinton wasn't impeached because he had a sex life, he was impeached because he lied under oath.

That's something you liberal 'tards seem to conveniently forget.

Five hundred miles? You mean the destruction reached all the way to Dallas, Texas, Little Rock Arkansas, Birmingham, Alabama, all the way to the Florida panhandle?

Just getting a few miles out of the city where the major flooding was would have saved many lives.

Point is, 'tard boy, it wasn't simply about WMD's. But, no matter how it's explained to you, you dumbass liberals just can't get a handle on the facts.

But then, in reality, you're not really interested in the facts, are you?

Understanding the facts would put an end to your little Bush-bashing party, now wouldn't it?

Well, then put Bush under oath and have him answer some questions about what he knew regarding the Iraq intelligence prior to the war. But see, you can never lie under oath if no one ever asks you the questions. Bush refused to take the oath when he met with the 9/11 commission. The reason is clear, he was going to lie.

Those that were in the dome were in no danger of being drowned. Those that stayed in their houses did. Now they stayed for whatever reason, and maybe they didn't think there would be a flood or the storm wouldn't be so bad or whatever, but they didn't move.

Well, the point is that they didn't leave. So saying they the mayor could have had them go here or there is moot.

For One and All,
First most people today are paying $30-$50 or more a month for Cable TV with an Annual Cost of $360 to $600 or more a year.
So they do not think anything of spending that same amount $360-$600 for a TV that will last 3, 5 or 7 Years.
At and average of 3-5 Hours Daily per Year that is 1100 to 1800 Hours of TV Viewing per Year :
* 3-Years = 3300--5400 Hours of TV Viewing
at a cost of about 11 Cents per Viewing Hour.
* 5-Years = 5500--9000 Hours of TV Viewing
at a cost of about 6.6 Cents per Viewing Hour.
* 7-Years = 7700--12600 Hours of TV Viewing
at a cost of about 4.8 Cents per Viewing Hour.
TV is one of the lowest cost forms of entertainment there is except for Radio :o) :o) :o)
The same set of numbers for a standard AM/FM 'consumer' Radio costing about 1/6th the Price at $60-$120.
* 3-Years = 1.8 Cents per Listening Hour
* 5-Years = 1.1 Cents per Listening Hour
* 7-Years = 0.8 Cent per Listening Hour

Anywhere out of the city which would be flooded. The first priority is to get to safe ground, then the decision can be made as to where to go.

Damn you are stupid. Hell, just sitting in a bus on a highway somewhere or in a Wall-Mart parking lot is better than staying put and drowning.
After the storm passes then the decision can be made as to were to go. I guess you would have told the residents, "we have the busses/means to get you out of here, but we don't know right now where to take you so until we figure that out you can just stay here and drown".

Oh right, it was because Iraq was an IMMEDIATE threat to us because of the WMD. So they panicked everyone and everyone said, well if it's so bad that these WMD are ready to hit us we'd better go get them. That whole issue of IMMEDIATE threat was what gave the support for the war. Otherwise, we would have had a reason to use other means of dealing with Iraq. So Bush cried wolf and we got his war. Don't even tell me about how we saved them from a bad guy or that we gave them freedom and all that other stuff. Bush didn't care about any of those things. He didn't run his election in 2000 on Iraq and their plight. Up to the 9/11 incident there was no talk about freeing the Iraqis and getting rid if Saddam. All that was a bullshit smokescreen when the invasion resulted in no WMD. Then the spin started. People now have lost the good feeling about the war because of how it has done nothing regarding WMD, it has only been a breeding ground of discontent and creating terrorism, and we have no end in sight because Bush won't ever admit he was wrong. In the last Presidential debates the moderator asked him to name three things he did wrong. Amamzingly he didn't say he did one. Bush is so full of himself it's disgusting.

So you lost a few shingles and the trees were swaying? You think that compares in any way to what was happining in NO and the other Gulf States? Anyone that could get even half way to where you live would have been perfectly safe. So where is your point besides on the top of your head.

Hey idjit, we are talking about getting out of the flood area and saving people from being drowned. Driving those people a few miles from the immediate area would have saved them. If you could have gotten them into the upper floors of some of the tall downtown buildings would have save lives until they could have been rescued. We aren't talking about taking them completely away from the storm, just getting them out of the area that would be flooded. You don't have to go far to do that. The first priority is to save lives. What to do after that can be decided later.

And just what do you think FEMA, troops or anyone else could have done in the city when the storm hit? They would have been in the same shape as the people there. FEMA already had people located just outside the area ready to move asap, the stupid Governor and Mayor were the cause of the delays.

Good planning. So how was Greyhound going to get all their busses to their destinations, empty them and then get them all to New Orleans in any timely matter. Hundreds of school busses ready to take people out of harms way and Nagin lets them set there and get flooded.

At least one young teenage lad had the courage to do something. He found the keys to a school bus, and didn't let the fact that he had never driven a bus before stop him, took the bus to the stadium, loaded it up with people and drove it to Houston. When the reporter ask him about stealing the bus, he said he "commondeered" it. Nagin should have taken lessons from that youngster.

Nagin's right.. what good are buses if you don't have drivers.. where would the drivers take the people,

who would take them in,
what shelters were set up for them who would provide medical care for the elderly and sick..

Who would take them in.. ..

They were mostly poor and black, remember...

ARS,
NBC's Tim Russert should have had "The Governor" of the State of Louisiana on his show and ask her about her delays to do just about anything.
waiting,,, Waiting... WAITING ! ! !
Including when she told the Mayor and the President that she needed another 24 Hours . . .
24 hours,,, 24 Hours... 24 HOURS ! ! !
Oh that's right the governor is to busy to talk to the press and ask questions.

I agree with you (gasp!). Both of your statements above are true.

But yet again, you seem to miss the big picture...

Lying about sex = impeachment

Lying about something that cost 1500 lives and 15,000 maimings = ?

I am looking to buy an SW100 second hand and have heard about the cable problem.

I understand that the newer version of the radio is less likely to suffer from this problem and that it can be identified from the hinge.

Can anybody tell me what to look for about the hinge to identify the improved version.

Thanks & Regards

Andrew

Those are local responsibilities. In his role as Mayor Nagin should have had a plan and the resources to move New Orleans residents out. The Nagin administration was well aware that there was a large group of poor people who would need help in an emergency. Like the ignored elephant in the middle of the room, Nagin chose to ignore that large group and do nothing about the problem. They were well aware of the problem, and had even included it in some flawed storm-sims. Now he want's to blame the fed's for his screwup.

All he could do was give a rambling half-coherent interview on AM 870 as the rains fell and the levees crumbled.

To get the same or better performance at a much better price just get a new Sony 7600. Don't waste money on a SW100.

No, it means that those who took the oath had nothing to hide. Bush in the meantime wouldn't even go unless Cheney came along. But I guess asking

Clinton about his personal sex life under oath was ok. What he did wasn't illegal except lying about it. Clinton's sex life was ever so important to the conservatives. I guess they don't feel that they shouldn't ask about Bush's knowledge, or lack of it when it comes down to peoples lives. No, sex is way more important than Americans dying.

One thing that might keep some of them in business is specialization in legacy equipment, such as turntables, VCRs, Beta (my grandparents -still alive and kicking- have an operational Betamax from the mid 70's), reel-to-reel, 8-track and to a lesser extent, cassettes. I myself have been comtemplating sending my trusty VCR for repair and cleaning, even though the cost is about as much as a new one. The reason??
The Sony I have is much better built than the ones on the market these days, and I already have a DVD player, so I don't need another one.

He left a lot behind. Also, the Superdome and Convention center were not execalt well thought out evacuation solutions. They as described a "last resort".

< SNIP>
Ipod
We delved a bit deeper into this question following the company's response and asked about competition from other non-regulated audio entertainment services such as Apple's (AAPL:Nasdaq - commentary - research - Cramer's Take) iPod.
The company representative said the iPod is inconsequential.

We beg to differ. The iPod and other portable music devices are, in fact, consequential. The iPod, which has been selling more than 5 million units per quarter, dwarfs Sirius' projected 3-million-subscriber base. We believe people with iPods will not be as likely to buy a portable satellite radio subscription, because the two products offer similar services in that they each provide the listener with unique programming. Every iPod sold has a negative effect on Sirius' addressable market.

Also, the same Sirius spokesman said that he expects Sirius to be a "cash cow" by 2007. In our view, this is a sign that management is not properly assessing or planning for the potential for higher subscriber acquisitions costs as competition between it and satellite radio rival XM (XMSR:Nasdaq - commentary - research - Cramer's Take) heats up and leads to higher advertising and content costs.

When we hear the words "cash cow," we think of a company like Microsoft (MSFT:Nasdaq - commentary - research - Cramer's Take), which can throw off tons of cash from operations with minimal investment. If Sirius management believes the company will be a cash cow one year from now, it is our view that the company is miscalculating the strength of free markets to create competitive threats that cut into margins and prevent monopolies.

We also believe much of Sirius' current $10.6 billion enterprise value is based on lofty expectations for Howard Stern's show, which is set to debut in January. The company has publicly stated that it needs 1 million subscribers in order to generate break-even results on a five-year $500 million outlay for Howard Stern. Taken at face value, this seems easily attainable, because Stern had upward of 6 million to 12 million steady listeners.

But these projections by Sirius are flawed at best. Sirius, on the basis of its low churn rate, estimates that the 1 million subscribers will have to stay on board an average of seven years with no increases to their monthly subscription rate. These are very vague forecasts that lack historical precedent; Sirius hasn't even been around for seven years. And the Stern deal, as it stands now, is only set to run five years.

Finally, we believe the satellite churn rate will be negatively affected by competition from other music services.

The bottom line is that you want to own Sirius for a trade. The company's short-term subscriber growth is impressive, and Howard Stern's January launch will create a lot of trade-worthy news.

But don't be fooled into believing Sirius will manage to dodge the laws of capitalism. Much like AOL, Sirius appears to be headed for a fall. After producing some nice short-term gains, Sirius will give back the profits over the long term.

Bush did request (not in your words) that she make a decision, as did the governors of two adjacent states. But she dithered and waffled and it got to the point that Bush was considering a federal takeover. That is not a step taken easily or lightly because states rights are an effective the counter-balance to federal government excess. We could give FEMA and Defense Dept the authority to take over a storm threatened or damaged area and impose martial law, but do we really want to cede that much state control?

Yes, although Bush and the federal agencies are soft pedalling that message. Of course Louisana was hit much harder than Florida and Alabama. That fact does not excuse paralyzed inaction though.

The answer is Louisana does not have the physical resources to handle that many people. By using the Superdome and Convention Center as evacuation centers they came close to repeating the mistakes of the Hurricane Concentration Camp of the early 20th century. And as much as we may not like to admit it, giving those people another place to live permanently will make it easier to not rebuild the very low lying areas of New Orleans.

No matter what I think of Bush otherwise, he is well aware of the long term consequences of federal takeovers in a governmantal structure that encourages decentralization of power. He could have taken over the effort in La., but ultimately decided that the governor should have the final call. It is not an easy decision.

She is a big girl and should be held accountable for her inaction.

I finally got around to fixing the encoder problem (erratic tuning) that's been bothering me for awhile.

Removal of the encoder board from the front panel was fairly straightforward; just time consuming. The inner and outer panel came apart surprisingly easy and making the repair somewhat enjoyable---re-assembly was just as easy.

My first attempt was to unsolder the encoder from the board. However, like many of you, I finally I bent back the tabs of the encoder with a small screwdriver to take it apart. Even though I had a replacement encoder it was difficult to unsolder the part from the board---plated through holes! It might be that replacement of the entire encoder would be required at some later date anyway.

As I had mentioned in a previous post, I was interested in learning why the encoder failed. After removal of the encoder wheel from the body of the encoder I examined the contact surfaces under stereo microscope (Leica SZ-4) at 40X magnification. I could plainly see what appeared to be normal wear patterns in the conductive surfaces that matched the position of the contact fingers in the mating part.

The contact fingers were examined next. Using similar magnification and upon carefully rotation of the part, I could plainly see that the contact points were worn through their silver plating and well into the brass base metal. The contact surfaces were burnished to a bright, mirror finish. Furthermore, the first two contact points were clean with a clear grease residue while the third inner contact (electrical common?) had a dark brown/black greasy residue about its contact surface.

With the realization that I rarely used the tuning knob I wanted to understand why the wear on the contact fingers seemed, in my opinion, excessive. I observed that the third contact finger (electrical common?), the one with the dark residue, was in continuous electrical contact with the wheel more so than the other two fingers that rode on the 'spokes' of the wheel. Furthermore, the surface that the contact was moving against had a rough surface consisting of striated tooling marks with uniform depth and spacing that suggested the result of rough polishing or grinding. Close study of the wear patterns on the wheel clearly revealed hills and valleys and that the hills were the surfaces that had been worn into the wheel by that contact finger but had not yet reached the depth of the valleys. It was this observation that led me to think that the brown/black residue on this particular contact was an accumulation of silver and brass particulate from the contact finger and wheel that had oxidized and mixed with the grease. The rough surface of the wheel was simply acting as an abrasive surface and was wearing the contact points.

I thought I would reuse the old encoder and see how long it would last after a bit of maintenance. I cleaned the encoder with electrical solvent cleaner and with the help of a very fine brush I cleaned the contact fingers as well. The parts were carefully blown dry then examined under the scope and were found clean. A small drop of DeoxIT contact cleaner was placed on the wheel surfaces then worked by pressing the assembly together and rotating the wheel against the contacts.

There was another problem with the encoder that I need to take care of as well. Ever since I got this receiver I had been bothered by the viscous, squishy feel of the tuning knob. While I had the encoder opened I carefully cleaned it of all grease with electrical cleaner. The designers of the encoder had used a relatively large quantity to gain the damping action that had bothered me. On the reverse side of the wheel (shaft end) the grease was easily removed with a probe and the remainder was readily soluble in the electrical solvent. However, before re-assembly, I placed a very light film of fine grease on the shaft. After the front panel was replaced I placed a small felt washer on the encoder shaft. The knob was positioned against the felt washer to get the desired feel. Now the knob turns with a dry, positive, precise, clean feel with no wobble or endplay. Furthermore, I replaced the R8B knob with that of the R8---the aesthetic enhancement that the old R8 knob adds to the receiver is remarkable!

While the front panel was detached from the chassis, I also removed all controls and added a drop of DeoxIT into them and worked it in. The tone control was beginning to get scratchy and I've had a problem with the volume control in the past.

In the process of working on the front panel I learned how the readouts are backlit---just a bunch of green LED's on a circuit board. I have always been upset by the lime-green color of the display. Drake had been known for decades for their use of a distinctive blue for illuminating the meter and dial displays of their older equipment and I liked it very much. I guess when the receiver was designed there weren't any blue or white LED's and those that are available now are expensive. I intend to experiment with blue and white LED's as well as blue filters. The closest filter color I had on hand to match the Drake blue on my vintage pieces of Drake gear is the blue tab on 3-ring binder notebook separators or hanging file tabs. I'll take a tab to the art supply shop and see if I can match it.

The receiver has been re-assembled and everything is working properly; tuning is as it should be. It will be interesting to see how long the repaired encoder lasts. I had the encoder replaced under warranty repair by Drake twice before.

In summary; apparently the encoder failed as a result of intermittent electrical contact resulting from dirty contact surfaces. Others have suggested contact bounce and poor electrical design. My personal opinion, although based on this one example and comments from others, suggests that the encoder is poorly designed or not able to take the continuous wear and tear it experiences in its application as a main tuning control for a radio receiver. Quite possibly it should be replaced with a part more suited to the task.

[Note: It's been three years since I cleaned the encoder---there has been no recurrence of the problem.]

You are showing your abysmal ignorance. If you had actually tuned a radio across the short wave bands, you would have encountered several mainland Chinese statons broadcasting in Mandarin and local Chinese dialects. Those stations are obviously for domestic Chinese audiences. If you had ever opened up a copy of the World Radio TV Handbook, you would have found a list of some of those stations.

The changes are internal. A ridge along the path of the cable has been removed so that it does not crimp it as the cable is flexed. AFAIK you

Not really worth the payments. There is a cash reserve just in case and a spare satellite in an hangar (on a hanger?).

The plan is to either put the spare in the same orbit as the other 3 or use it on the Equator and use 2 of the others as rotating (pun intended) spares.

If they do the former, XM's fixed-install advantage will vanish.

Stay tuned.

Well,I did have Rifle Range (World War Two Garand Rifles) training at Fort Gordon,Georgia,November and December 1962.I missed more Bullseyes than I shot at (Maggies Drawers) and I did get some kind of a purty little metal to wear (it has two little bitty tiny chains on it) on my lean mean fighting machine chest.I think I wore that (a Lieutant at the Rifle range told me it is an ass chewing medal) medal about two or three times on my Army Class A's.

Probably past fights between various customers and the gorillas at the "Parcel Delivery" company. Wouldn't take too many $1500 radios smashed up, and then have the claims adjuster say that they couldn't tell where is was smashed up, because of the old box, to cause problems with their reputation. Drake's reputation, I mean.

I have listed a NEW SGC SG-230 SmartTuner on ebay. As you most likely know, this is the ultimate automatic antenna tuner.

This is a commerical grade, state of the art antenna tuner for Ham, commercial, marine, aviation, military, intelligence and shortwave use.

For more information or to see the pictures click on this link:

http://cgi.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewItem&item=6802005559

If the linik does not work for you, just go to http://ebay.com and do a search for: "SGC model SG-230"

I have the ability to ship this unit worldwide.

Thanks,

Bill

Hello Andrew, Mike et al

You can tell whether the radio has a revised cover by looking at the outside of the unit. Open the clamshell so that you can see the display. Below the display there is a hinge section which is ca. 60mm long. The revised display cover has a slot about 15mm long. The slot is about 10mm from the right hand edge of the hinge section. If there is no apparent slot, then it is the older style case and the cables are prone to failure.

Sony sells a replacement kit which includes a new half of the display cover, and cable cover, and two new cables. NB that to to this job you need a good Philips '000' screwdriver or equivalent. The screw heads in the hinges are tiny.

For more information, see:

Yea, but that damn Cricket match is still going on. (Time to download some Podcasts).

6020 (then 5995 at 14:00) is a better bet when things get crummy, like last night. When it gets bad enough, the Catholic station in the Philipines (6020 12:30+) drops out.

Well given the standard of your spelling how are we supposed to know what you are on about. And as for gift of context the utter drivel you spout is quite amusing. It also lets others know you are quite immature and dont know an awful lot. One occurance and the Brazilian guy was so innocent his address was found in one of the un-exploded back packs. The only thing he was innocent of was that he wasnt actually carrying a bomb and probably wasnt part of the 5 bomb assault team that day. What about the American Police who shoot to kill then ask questions later.... your saying this doesnt happen?
As far as my country is better than your country goes, i have never said that and nor will i. I have a huge amount of respect for America and its people.. well, most of its people... and you will find if you knew me at all i take as i find.. if people are nice to me i am nice back. I am nice to people who i dont know... until they make me dislike them... The specially trained quote is true... they are not normal Bobbies on the Beat.. but that said, even specially trained people screw up sometimes, its a fact of life.

Comprehension is a big word for you to spell correctly, its a shame the rest of it isnt too good... Let me say to you once more The British Empire didnt bring slavery to America, you managed that by yourself quite sucessfully. BTW slavery was around in the days long before the "British Empire", slavery even today is a way of life for many people.

Please dont think for one minute i support or ever did support slavery... because i dont and you know, as well as i that slavery still goes on in many countrys today, especially some third world countrys but there is also still a lot of it in the US and to a degree the UK too. I have no problems with the comments you have made Michael and on the whole i agree with you.
The whole arguement on this thread was someone whit half a brain saying it was the British Empire that created slavery.. and it simply isnt true. All i pointed out was that slavery was massive in the US and you even had internal wars over it so to have a go at the UK over slavery was a bit idiotic.
Cheers...

Actually it was the british colonies that introduced slavery in America.
The first imported African slaves brought to the British North American colonies were landed at Jamestown, Virginia in 1619.

Long before the U.S.A. existed.

In the 17th century, slavery was used as punishment by conquering English Parliament armies against native Catholics in Ireland. Between the years 1649 and 1653, during the Cromwellian conquest of Ireland by the New Model Army under the command of Oliver Cromwell, thousands of Irish Catholics were forced into slavery. Cromwell had a deeply religious antipathy to the Catholic religion and Irish Catholics who had participated in Confederate Ireland had all their land confiscated and were transported to the West Indies as slaves.

Eh?? why are you telling me this?? I didnt say and never have that slavery never existed in the UK and i never said The British Empire didnt condone and use slavery. But the English never introduced slavery to the US

Chronology Of The History Of Slavery: 1619-1789

The other crucial event that would play a role in the development of America was the arrival of Africans to Jamestown. A Dutch slave trader exchanged his cargo of Africans for food in 1619. The Africans became indentured servants, similar in legal position to many poor Englishmen who traded several years labor in exchange for passage to America. The popular conception of a racial-based slave system did not develop until the 1680's. They were out of water and able to travel to the 'dome at the time Nagin was informed. Nagin let them get flooded by saying, "I'm like - you've got to be kidding me. This is a natural disaster. Get every doggone Greyhound bus line in the country and get their asses moving to New Orleans," instead of having them moved to the 'dome and used to transport people out of town. As he waited for the luxury buses he demanded, the floods surrounded and disabled the school buses. This is how Nagin let them get flooded.

I don't know about the MA Senatorial complement, but Vice President Gore appears to have done something:

""KNOXVILLE, Tennessee (AP) -- Al Gore helped airlift some 270 Katrina evacuees on two private charters from New Orleans, acting at the urging of a doctor who saved the life of the former vice president's son.

Gore criticized the Bush administration's slow response to Katrina in a speech Friday in San Francisco, but refused to be interviewed about the mercy missions he financed and flew on September 3 and 4.

However, Dr. Anderson Spickard, who is Gore's personal physician and accompanied him on the flights, said: "Gore told me he wanted to do this because like all of us he wanted to seize the opportunity to do what one guy can do, given the assets that he has."

An account of the flights was posted this week on a Democratic Party Web page.

It was written by Greg Simon, president of the Washington-based activist group FasterCures. Simon, who helped put together the mission, also declined an interview.

On September 1, three days after Katrina slammed into the Gulf Coast, Simon learned that Dr. David Kline, a neurosurgeon who operated on Gore's son, Albert, after a life-threatening auto accident in 1989, was trying to get in touch with Gore. Kline was stranded with patients at Charity Hospital in New Orleans.

"The situation was dire and becoming worse by the minute -- food and water running out, no power, 4 feet of water surrounding the hospital and ... corpses outside," Simon wrote.

Gore responded immediately, telephoning Kline and agreeing to underwrite the $50,000 each for the two flights, although Larry Flax, founder of California Pizza Kitchens, later pledged to pay for one of them.

"None of the airlines involved required a contract or any written guarantee of payment before sending their planes and volunteer crews," Simon wrote of the American Airlines flights. "One official said if Gore promised to pay, that was good enough for them."

He also recruited two doctors, Spickard and Gore's cousin, retired Col. Dar LaFon, a specialist in internal medicine who once ran the military hospital in Baghdad.

Most critically, Gore worked to cut through government red tape, personally calling Gov. Phil Bredesen to get Tennessee's support and U.S. Transportation Secretary Norm Mineta to secure landing rights in New Orleans.

About 140 people, many of them sick, landed in Knoxville on September 3. The second flight, with 130 evacuees, landed the next day in Chattanooga.''

The Clinton admiinistratrion used reverse psychology on the neocons, telling the Bush administration that Chalabi was an ambitious liar who was only trying to trick the USA into deposing Saddam Hussein and putting Chalabi into power. The Clinton administration knew that Bush wanted an excuse to go to war in Iraq, and they knew that Bush would do the opposite of whatever they recommended. Therefore, when Bush decided to adopt Chalabi and show their faith in his fables of WMDs, it was all Clinton's fault for originally telling them the truth. See how easy it is to put the blame on Clinton?

Blackout hits large sections of LA

By LAURA WIDES

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - A large portion of Los Angeles was blacked out Monday when electrical power was lost.

The power got knocked out shortly before 1 p.m. after two power surges.

Traffic lights throughout downtown and the San Fernando Valley were not working, causing major traffic problems, according to video from helicopter news crews.

Downtown highrises were also darkened.

The city's department of water and power said it was investigating the cause and extent of the outage.

You said:

"There
may certainly have been errors and/or shortcomings on the Federal side (which no specifics have yet been mentioned), but sooner or later everyone's going to have to face the facts: the locals failed magnificently, for whatever reason(s), and aggravated the existing problem to the extent that no-one could have saved them from themselves."

And:

"The response to include 40,000 personnel began within hours and was in place on or about the 5 day mark. In contrast, it took 9-days for the four storms that smacked Florida last year. Bearing in mind that Katrina left a more degraded/damaged infrastructure to navigate than the Florida storms did. Could the reponse for Katrina been quicker? There may be someone who could have done it faster, but I wouldn't place that expectation on them as it begins to border on the unreasonable."

Seems that you leave little likelyhood for error on FEMA's part.

3157. OT USA To Use Nuclear Weapons In Preemptive Strikes

We really are doomed now:

''Preemptive Nuclear Strikes - Now Only A Matter of Time

By D.L. McCracken

Have you been paying close attention to the horror that is New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina? Have you found yourself not really following other news items of significant importance because first, Katrina has pushed everything else to the back burner by mainstream media and second, what is happening in New Orleans is all the bad news you can handle at the moment?

There is at least one piece of information released to the media recently that deserves much more attention than it's receiving. Have you by chance skimmed over headlines or caught the back end of a news item with contain phrases such as, "revised doctrine for the use of nuclear weapons"? How about "preemption strategies"?

It's time to start paying close attention because something else is happening in the United States that is pretty damn scary.

It's called The Doctrine for Joint Nuclear Operations and the Pentagon has drafted certain revisions to the original 1995 document which simply put, describes the role of U.S. nuclear deterrence, force posturing and deployment considerations. In a nutshell, the doctrine specifies definite rules for the use by the U.S. of nuclear weapons. The newly revised doctrine provides more options and reasons for using nuclear devices as well as other weapons of mass destruction against nations and/or terrorist groups and furthermore, includes an option for preemptive use of said weapons.

In other words, the revised doctrine includes the option for the United States to fire off the first nuclear missile - a preemptive strike, an idea that was initially announced by U.S. President George W. Bush in 2002.

Along with the newly revised preemption clause, the doctrine also incorporates:

- a reduction in the level of hostilities where a nuclear weapon could be utilized;

- a support for the utilization of nuclear weapons against all forms of weapons of mass destruction including chemical and biological;

- a support for deploying nuclear weapons against terrorists and terror factions;

- support for protection of nuclear forces over protecting people.

The revised doctrine contains over 20 additional pages devoted to various nuclear options including the use of nulcear devices in theatre operations or in an active combat zone. The new chapter devoted to theater nuclear operations was added as a direct result of the emergence of dangerous 'rogue states' and organized terrorist factions especially if those entities had been successful in obtaining weapons of mass destruction.

Critics of the revised doctrine warn that the added options for deployment of a nuclear device "threaten to make nuclear weapons just another tool in the toolbox". The revised document also includes at least four scenarios where commanders in a combat theatre situation request Presidential approval for use of nuclear weapons first.

According to The Nuclear Information Project, "in nuclear preemption, the objective no longer is deterrence through threatened retaliation but battlefield destruction of targets with nuclear weapons first in anticipation that deterrence will fail."

Th revised docrine also takes into consideration the inevitable collateral damage caused by a nuclear device, even weapons with a "lower yield". One paragraph from the revised doctrine states,"Specific techniques for reducing nuclear collateral damage may include lower yield weapons, improving accuracy, employing multiple smaller weapons, adjusting the height of burst, and offsetting the desired ground zero."

So there you have it. Nuclear weapons are the ultimate killing machines. Deterrence has worked for decades but suddenly the Bush administration wants to scrap deterrence and incorporate preemptive strike capability when that administration or a commander in a ground combat situation feels that it would be appropriate.

We all are deeply aware of the destruction that one small nuclear bomb can create, not only in the immediate aftermath of a strike but in the weeks, months, years and decades to come. At a time when we would hope that our world leaders would be doing their utmost to decrease the nuclear threat, the world's most powerful nation is writing doctrines that will allow them to strike first - anywhere on this planet.

It's now only a matter of time.''

Just like Clinton told Bush to run a budget surplus too, saying it was best for the economy. And there's Bush taking the bait and doing the opposite.

For One and All,
FLAT FOLDED "Z" DIPOLE [F 2 Z D] ANTENNA Flat { Bent Horizontal "Z" }
F2ZD =>
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5058
When a Shortwave Listener (SWL) says that they are going to install a Dipole Antenna; and it is apparent that they have a very long dipole that will be mounted very low. I suggest that the SWL install the Dipole in the Shape of a Flat {Horizontal} Folded {Bent} "Z" with the Arms Bent using four supports. Use four pieces of 21 Foot Top Rail at the Corners of a 25 Foot Square. With 3 Feet in the Ground the Top of the Top-Rail will produce an 18 Feet Antenna Rigging Height.
An 85 Foot Flat Folded "Z" Dipole Antenna that is Rigged on the diagonal between two opposite corners and the Remaining Wire is then Rigged Clock-Wise {To the Right} to the adjacent corners.
This still gives the Shortwave Listener (SWL) :
1. A 'balanced' Antenna
2. A relatively 'longer' Antenna Wire
3. An Omni-Directional Antenna
TIP - Adding a 4:1 Balun and Coax Cable completes the F2ZD Antenna for the Shortwave Listener (SWL).
NOTE - The Shortwave Listener (SWL) "Shack" Ground is the only required

Ground for the F2ZD Antenna.
OBTW - A Ground Rod can be installed in the Concrete base of one or all of the Top-Rail Supports for future used.
FWIW - These same Four Corner Top-Rail Supports can be used to Rig a Horizontal Loop Antenna about 100 Foot around.
F2ZD ANTENNA SIZING - Sizing the Square :
* 68 Feet F2ZD Antenna = 6.9MHz > 13.8 MHz > 27.6 MHz
20 Foot Square = 28' Diagonal = 80' Around
* 85 Feet F2ZD Antenna = 5.5 MHz > 11 MHz > 22 MHz
25 Foot Square = 35' Diagonal = 100' Around
* 102 Feet F2ZD Antenna = 4.6 MHz > 9.2 MHz > 18.4 Mhz
30 Foot Square = 42' Diagonal = 120' Around

Note - Standard Dipole Antenna Formula : 468 / Frequency MHz

I disagree. In that case, he thought Clinton was setting an precedent that he just did not want to follow. Your example is more like knowing that milliions of new jobs were created during the Clinton administration, so Bush did his best not to let any get created, and he almost succeeded in his first four years. In these cases, you have to blame Clinton for being such a bad role model, and Bush just had to do the opposite.

Another example of ignoring advice and doing the opposite was when the outgoing Clinton adminstration told the incoming Bush administration that terrorism would be their most serious foreign policy concern, and they thought he was trying to "Wag the Dog". So it is Clinton's fault that Bush was not concerned about terrorism until after 9/1 Since the Hart-Rudman commission was chartered by Clinton, and it was Clinton's fault that Bush politely ignored the recommendations of the Hart-Rudman commission..

See? All Bush's mistakes are due to Clinton.

Further to earlier posts on this topic, Ontario has rejected the use of Shariah law to settle family problems such as divorce, inheritance, and child custody. The Quebec Superior Court recently made a similar ruling. The government and the courts felt that women would be discriminated against within the Moslem culture in violation of the Canadian Rights and Freedom Laws. It is ulikely that the matter will be raised in any of the other provinces, so Shariah Law is a dead issue in Canada.

My Sony ICF-SW7600GR developed a very small crack in one corner of the front plastic cover (lower right), where the front cover meets its rear counterpart.

I do not consider replacing it anytime soon, but I would like to know how much it could cost as well as whether this part will be available in a few years. As I consider replacing it when the print starts getting off.

Cheers.

P.S.

Is there any howto on how to replace the front cover? I have some doubts about the lanyard swivel.

Now, with Bush and the Republicans in control, Alex is still bashing the government just like he did before, but now he's considered left wing.

The truth is Alex Jones is an opportunist. He makes money by selling his conspiracy tapes to anyone who will buy them. He recognizes that the nutty fringe of whichever side is out of power is also nutty enough to buy his tapes.

There's a difference in him going there to mark the occasion or in some http://servicesales.sel.sony.com

1-800-488-SONY (7669)

Sony DAPC
8281 NW 107 Terrace
Kansas City, MO 64153

I did not see anything for radios, short wave or otherwise, so you will probably need to call and talk to one of their operators. Based on my experience, they can probably find your part (I was able to get the sync detector chip for the ICF-2010).

Be prepared for sticker shock. About 10 years ago, I paid almost US$10 to get a replacement cover for the battery compartment.of my ICF-7600D. A front cover may cost almost as much as a new radio, and your best bet may be to get a donor parts radio (possibly on eBay).

To open it, you just need to remove the screws on the back with the little arrows pointing to them. There may be a screw inside the battery compartment. This should free the back from the rest of the radio. Remove the screws on the back that hold the circuit board to the front, and the front should come free. This is based on my expereince opening my ICF-7600D and my ICF-SW7600G, so YMMV. On my radios, the lanyard swivel was not an issue.

Of course you neglect to take into account that those same workers were doing their jobs for 18 hours a day, over 10 days in a row, while working in disaster conditions while away from their families. But Bush cut his 5 week vacation short two days, so I can see how hard Bush is working too (rolls eyes)

When you going to Vegas, 'tard boy? After all, you've been working pretty darn hard to prove that you're a clueless 'tard boy.

Dat rite, mofo.

Besides, those busses couldn't go anywhere after the blacks (oops, I mean the poor innocent peaceful opressed humble noble people of color) looted the batteries from all the busses so they could power their newly looted plasma TVs.

I recall the way we enforced them was by firing on and destroying their military installations, which was ok by the UN.

Presidentail? I don't think that's exactly what it's called, but isn't that what Clinton was looking for all the time?

There was very abundant reasons for going into Afghanistan. No one rightly can dispute that. However, Bush tried to stretch it into Iraq and it was a hard sell. So they told us about IMMEDIATE threat. It wasn't a small thing. I remember watching Powell making his 3 hour impassioned speech. I recall being just as worried as everyone else and thinking we had to something about it. The part where he talked about the Nexxus of terrorists and Saddam seemd a bit more murkier. There was no clear smoking gun.
Freeing Iraqis was a nice thought, but it was just a byproduct of the war.

I find that funny coming from an old man who's supposed to be wise. I can't imagine an old man going around calling people tards unless he's got Alzheimers or something.

You really blew the order there. It should have been:

1: Clinton, because, well, everything is his fault.
2: The Democratic Minority in Congress. The feds had to divert valuable resources in defending the Roberts nomination instead of focusing in on the hurricane.
3: Saddam Hussein: If we didn't have to go to Iraq then we'd have the proper guard forces back home.
4: Clinton again, because he had sex with an intern and lied about it

The winners:

1: GWB, because without him Kerry would have been President and you know how that flip flopper Kerry would have screwed up
2: GWB, because he's a take control kind of guy that decided he's going to investigate his part in the whole mess. Amazingly, he finds after interviewing himself that he did a great job. And what he did was "hard work"
3: Dick Cheney: he actually diverted the hurricane before it hit land by saying "Fuck you Katrina"

Are the articles at www.infowars.com true about foreign troops in America,in New Orleans and on the Gulf Coast and offshore on ships? If so,I believe I know why bush went back to New Orleans and the Gulf Coast areas.His "daddy" said new world order about 34 or 38 times (I don't remember the exact number of times his "daddy" said new world order) and bush just loves new world order! Call me mistaken about that if y'all want to,but I believe I am right.

Interesting. And yet this never came up about no-fly zones until months after 9/11. Obviously it wasn't all that important before. In fact none of what was said seemd at all important during the elections or prior to 9/11.

You were mistaken. What was actually said was "New Canadian Border".

The plan is to move it at least 500 miles north of where it currently is.

I have the answer for evacuating New Orleans the next time (if there ever is a next time and I hope it never happens again) a "Katrina" is going to hit.(gosh,I am a Genius) They should build a few wide canals leading North and Northwest and West out of New Orleans and build some big fast Canal Boats powered by diesel engines.

Now, now. Be nice. You have to feel sorry for someone who is so pathehtic that he has to give himself a self-appointed and grandiose title. It is reminscent of the cable channel that tells you they are "fair and balanced" since you would not have realized it unless they told you. His best dx catch is probably HCJB, and he probably used a W-J (with a blown front end) connected to a Beverage pointing east.
The gratuitous names he regurgitates are obvious indications of his own insecurities over his intelligence, his masculinity, and his personal hygiene. Just sit back, enjoy the comedy from the clown, and have some pity for him. It is so clear that name-calling in the short wave news group is his whole life.

JD,
I would only change the emphasis from Local Leadership to State Leadership (or lack of same) since under our System of Balancing Federal and State Authority it is the State Government that Allows and Actually Facilitates the Interaction of the Federal Government with the Local County and City Governments.
Clearly the Governor of the State of Louisiana has not helped in this critical role of being a Facilitator between the Federal and Local Governments.
The past and current problems in the State of Louisiana are caused by the State Government of the State of Louisiana.

FS: shortwave radio dx-394

this is a radioshack all digital shortwave reciever.
covers 150 khz to 29999 khz am,usb,lsb,cw bands

digital green backlit display.
programable stations, s-meter

this is a well cared for reciever that i have used and owned for many years. it will operate on 12 volts or 120 volt ac power source.

has a telescopic antenna (factory) or you can thread on a pl-259 coax connector (c.b. radio type) and use an outdoor antenna.

has a tape recorder rca connector on the back for recording broadcast. or you may use this to link to your computer with the right software to decode morse code and weatherfax's in real time.

I would like to get $75.00 CA for this reciever, not including shipping..

remove NOSPAM from my email address to reply.

I listen to the Big 870 WWL New Orleans (N'Awlins) on my Panasonic model RF-708 Radio,untill I get tired of looking at it and I swap it out for one of my other old beat up Goodwill radios for a while.(maybe somebody can find a picture with information about the radio on the internet?) I was listening to the Big 870 WWL about an hour or more before I first posted about it.I can pick up the Big 870 WWL in the daytime too,but not too good and it fades in and out too much in the daytime.

I don't Yahoo and I can't even view the message link at the top because Yahoo wants cookies enabled, which I'm not willing to do either so with that I don't quite get the Z shape idea other than to fit the antenna in less space lengthwise but that shape will make it less effective.

The 4:1 BALUN is a good idea but they are not all made equal and the response on some will fall off on the low end so watch out for that.

Some Presidents work, and others really work. You have to go back to Reagan to match the amount of vacation time this guy has put in.

criticize with. But since you think you'd have kicked German ass nothing substantive to argue with.

Some vehicles have little thin flat "wires" in the windshield and rear windows and mirrors for helping to melt ice and sleet that gets on there in cold wet weather.Sometimes a break in the wires occurs and then there is no more electrical contact.Auto parts stores sell repair kits to repair broken contact areas.The repair kits will also work to repair worn out electrical contact areas under the push buttons of radios and many other things too such as remote control units and keyboards,etc.

A Nazi-loving alien, no less. When his favorite former Nazi still had to launch into a speech of praise for him. And Maria and her family stayed for the rest of the party. Shame on all of them.

The vast majority of Chinese aren't into Islam, so it doesn't appear to be an imminent vote. The government here is selling citizenships to Chinese business types with money to invest in Canada. A bit over half of Vancouver BC is now Chinese..

Selling citizenships goes against everything I believe in.

They've had Jewish courts for a hundred years. There isn't much difference between Orthodox Judaism and Islam. The good Rabbis want to re-establish the Temple in Jerusalem in order to perform blood sacrifices there again. Seems to be a hard habit to break.

They are now busy excavating under the Mosque at the site of the 'Dome of the Rock' aka 'Temple Mount' so it will collapse, allowing for a rebuilding of a long lost building.

Good Idea!

I say give the Jews and the Arabs 10 Nukes each.
Let them reduce the whole Middle East to a radioactive heap of molten glas slag. Let this nuclear exchange be their ultimate blood orgy sacrifice. The world will be a MUCH BETTER place afterwards with BOTH of these KOOK RELIGIONS reduced

Solomon's lost septic tank...? (rotflmao!)

Let' em dig. I hope the whole dammed thing caves in and the Dome of The Rock drops into the ensuing hole and then the goofy Arabs try to tear down the Western Wall and then World War III occurs as the end result !

If you get the front panel off and you want to repair the crack,a permanent repair is to scuff up the area under the front panel where the crack is with a piece of coarse grade sandpaper and use some epoxy fiberglass resin (marine supply stores and building supply stores such as Sears and Home Depot sell fiberglass resin and fiberglass cloth) and cut a few pieces of fiberglass cloth and use that to repair the cracked area.

Cuhulin,
One Station "Fixed" Out-Side AM/MW Loop Antenna
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5065
Why not build a simple outside AM/MW Loop Antenna that is pointed in the direction of WWL and tuned for WWL in New Orleans at 870 kHz ?
* Eight Foot Tri-Angle = Three Sided Loop with a Flat Bottom and two Sloping Sides to the Peak.
* Rig the Top [Peak] from a tree limb or the eaves of the house and use two stakes in the ground to hold the Corners in place using Nylon/Poly Rope. The Bottom can be 2-4 feetabove ground level.
* Feed the Loop from the Corner that is away from the 'target' Radio Station.
* Nine (9) Turns = 216 Feet of Wire
* One Inch Turn Spacing = 8 Inches Wide
* Use a Variable Tunning Capacitor or a Fixed Capacitor of about 100pF
* Use Twin Lead or Coax Cable Feed-in-Line to the Radio.
AM/MW Ferrite Rod Antenna Coupler :
If your Radio does not have External AM/MW Antenna Terminals then build a simple Ferrite Rod Antenna Coupler using a Cardboard Tube from a Roll of Paper Towels.
* Wind about 35-50 Turns of Wire with about a 1/4" Spacing between the Turns.
* Place it next to the Radio's built-in Ferrite Rod Antenna.
I built one up in Twain Harte,Ca so I could listen to KGO in the SF Bay Area at 810 kHz all day long and it works very well to make KGO an easy listening Radio Station.

Telamon,
Yes as you indicated, when the standard Dipole Antenna is Folded into a "Z" and mounted lower to the Ground : Then it is really no longer an 'effective' Dipole Antenna for a single band and direction.
But for the Shortwave Listener (SWL) who have be told that they have to use a Dipole Antenna; or that the Dipole Antenna is the best Antenna; or who already bought a Dipole Antenna; or was given a Dipole Antenna; and insists on using a Dipole Antenna. Then my recommendation is the Flat Folded "Z" Dipole (F2ZD) Antenna.
The Flat Folded "Z" Dipole (F2ZD) Antenna can be a reasonably good Broad Banded and Omni-Directional Shortwave Listener (SWL) Antenna.
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5058
NOTE - If only two pieces of Top-Rail can be installed as Supports for the F2ZD Antenna; then the Wire-Ends can be Sloped to the Adjacent Corners.
ALTERNATIVE - If however, the only place you can run/route the Wire-Ends is under the Top Wires of the Dipole. Then try Sloping the Wire-Ends back down to near the Ground at the Center-Point of the Dipole. From the Side this looks like a squashed Inverted Triangle (Delta). Note - Do not join the Ends of the Dipole together to from a Loop Antenna.
Once Again, the 4:1 Balun and Coax Cable Feed-in-Line increases the F2ZD Antenna's utility for the Shortwave Listener (SWL).

A Recording of the Bow Bells made in 1926 has been used by the BBC World Service as an interval signal for the English Language broadcasts since the early 1940s. It is still used today preceding some English broadcasts.

I have yet to find a recording of Bow Bells on the web in WAV or MP3-AAC. Where do recordings of this interval exist (in these formats)?

Sorry, but I have to do it:

<sigh...>

There, now I feel better.

Let me try this one more time.

It's not just oil.

That was just a small part of the equation.

It was oil [PLUS] the largest supply of fresh water in the Mideast [PLUS] (and mainly) a tremendous, spectacular Mideast strategic location for our bases [PLUS] the beefing up of our economy by having a nice little war. The oil was just frosting on the cake.

These are the views of Perkins, author of "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man" and an insider employee of a "think-tank" that was a front for one of the intelligence agencies.

As to why we "haven't realized any benefit because Iraq has oil" is because the morons in charge thought the Iraqis would be throwing flowers, not bombs, blowing up the pipeline every other week.

The Moslems argued that since the Jews and Roman Catholics had religious-based family courts for over a hundred years it was discriminatory to not allow the same for Moslems. The Ontario government's answer to this was to disallow the practice for Roman Catholics and Jews alike. Since nobody could have family courts, nobody was being discriminated against. All family settlements now have to be in accord with Canadian Law administered by secular courts. This will present some problems for Moslems. For example, a divorce granted in Canada would not be accepted in countries under Shariah law. I do not believe that this proscription will apply to Aboriginals, who have considerable autonomy. It should be noted that Aboriginals (Indians) were never a conquered people but came into Canada as allies, but that's another story.

I Like This

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF A REPUBLICAN
By John Gray

Joe gets up at 6:00am to prepare his morning coffee. He fills his pot full of good clean drinking water because some liberal fought for minimum water quality standards.

He takes his daily medication with his first swallow of coffee. His medications are safe to take because some liberal fought to insure their safety and work as advertised.

All but $10.00 of his medications are paid for by his employers medical plan because some liberal union workers fought the ir employers for paid medical insurance, now Joe gets it too. He prepares his morning breakfast, bacon and eggs this day. Joe's bacon is safe to eat because some liberal fought for laws to regulate the meat packing industry.

Joe takes his morning shower reaching for his shampoo; His bottle is properly labeled with every ingredient and the amount of its contents because some liberal fought for his right to know what he was putting on his body and how much it contained. Joe dresses, walks outside and takes a deep breath. The air he breathes is clean because some tree hugging liberal fought for laws to stop industries from polluting our air.

He walks to the subway station for his government subsidized ride to work; it saves him considerable money in parking and transportation fees. You see, some liberal fought for affordable public transportation, which gives everyone the opportunity to be a contributor.

Joe begins his work day; he has a good job with excellent pay, medicals benefits, retirement, paid holidays and vacation because some liberal union members fought and died for these working standards. Joe's employer pays these standards because Joe's employer doesn't want his employees to call the union.

If Joe is hurt on the job or becomes unemployed he'll get a worker compensation or unemployment check because some liberal didn't think he should loose his home because of his temporary misfortune.

Its noon time, Joe needs to make a Bank Deposit so he can pay some bills. Joe's deposit is federally insured by the FSLIC because some liberal wanted to protect Joe's money from unscrupulous bankers who ruined the banking system before the depression.

Joe has to pay his Fannie Mae underwritten Mortgage and his below market federal student loan because some stupid liberal decided that Joe and the government would be better off if he was educated and earned more money over his life-time.

Joe is home from work, he plans to visit his father this evening at his farm home in the country. He gets in his car for the drive to dads; his car is among the safest in the world because some liberal fought for car safety standards.

He arrives at his boyhood home. He was the third generation to live in the house financed by Farmers Home Administration because bankers didn't want to make rural loans. The house didn't have electric until some big government liberal stuck his nose where it didn't belong and demanded rural electrification. (Those rural Republican's would still be sitting in the dark)

He is happy to see his dad who is now retired. His dad lives on Social Security and his union pension because some liberal made sure he could take care of himself so Joe wouldn't have to. After his visit with dad he gets back in his car for the ride home.

He turns on a radio talk show, the host's keeps saying that liberals are bad and conservatives are good. (He doesn't tell Joe that his beloved Republicans have fought against every protection and benefit Joe enjoys throughout his day) Joe agrees, 'We don't need those big government liberals ruining our lives; after all, I'm a self made man who believes everyone should take care of themselves, just like I have'.

The American Republican Party is so sick, that one of it's spokesmen blamed the victims of Hurricane Katrina for not avoiding their plight.
Shame on Fox News for giving this sucker a go.
The idiot even went on to say that :

" They should get an education and work hard.."

Maybe it'll dawn on Americans that they simply can't afford a Republican Government, but they can afford an effective Medical, Welfare and Education System.

Since when did George Bush Jnr have a good education or ever work hard?
He has relied on money and privilege all his life.

Since when did education or working hard save you from a natural disaster?

There is a fancy retirement community in Florida called The Villages.I think it is near the little town of Lady Lake,Florida not far Northwest out of Orlando.I once passed through Lady Lake (I like the back roads,I am too slow poke a driver for the Interstates,if I get over 50 miles per hour that is wayyyy too fast for me) about ten years ago on my way back home in Jackson.

Yes but quite probably because you looked it up in the dictionary.... shame you let yourself down in the next sentance though mis spelling a simple word. You used "to" in place of "too"
By the way i dont own a pink horsie so either youve mistaken me for someone else again or you have this sort of fettish going on in your head.... It's, Isn't and Didn't are all correct terms of use. **

Horsie also doesnt exist as a word... i could go on.. and youd come back with more garbage so ill leave it there... carry on if you must but im not going to waste any more time on you... have a nice day now...

How are we to follow a conversation littered with grammatical errors that make words unrecognisable? And as illiteracy goes, surely it's the "dum dum" who can't spell that's illiterate. And as for betters... LMFAO....
As far as fundamentals go too, I was quite happy to have a sensible meaningful discussion but, as with many postings in here, you let yourselves down badly with incorrect theories of History and seem to have no real grasp of reality and any realistic command of the English language. Then because the person posting isn't American you jump in with both feet then get upset when you're shown up. Mock me if you will but in the end it will be you who shows themselves up... 10-4

The English never introduced slavery to the US, it was the Dutch.. Anyway as you say, does it really matter? I wasn't the one to bring the subject of slavery up and to be honest i'm not that bothered if slavery was a "British Colonial" thing... Judge people by who they are today not by things that happened far in the past. Your great granddad could have "friendly fired" and killed his allies (my relatives) but I certainly wouldn't hold it against you.

I think its time to move on to more interesting topics, don't you?

Just an aside... It is believed by some in high places that China will sweet talk Mexico into giving them military access with intent to invade the U.S.A. "should current trends continue..."

China is making plans for expansion. In their view, it's a matter of life or death... Simple survival. Overpopulation, etc... The trigger could be Taiwan.

Not anytime soon, but Hitler had his plans before 1930.

Who knows what will happen for sure, but this isn't the most outrageous thing I've ever heard of. U.S. Relations with Mexico can certainly get worse as the immigration issue eventually needs to be dealt with.

I think you'll find it's the Irish that ignore the wishes of their fellow citizens and didn't care about their rights is actually what happened. If it weren't for the RUC and the Army you would have wiped yourselves out years ago. What possible motive have people got to riot, smash up and burn cars, shoot guns at people who are trying to bring calm to the situation and murder people (sounds very NO, maybe it wasn't the blacks there it was the Irish in black balaclavas)... And as for it would all disappear in a minute you live in cloud cuckoo land.
Now stop being so silly..

<enter pedant mode>

Neutron bombs can only be small yield devices.

A "normal" thermonuclear bomb works in three phases. First a (Plutonium/Uranium) fission device is exploded. Second the radiation from this explosion is used to ignite a fusion reaction in a structure of light elements (Hydrogen/Lithium). This produces a flood of high energy neutrons. Third, these high energy neutrons cause fission in the bomb casing and other structures made of "Depleted" Uranium 238. U238 doesn't produce the chain reaction possible with U235, Plutonium 239, (or U233).
But when hit with a high energy neutron, the nucleus will fission.

A neutron bomb is a small thermonuclear device that doesn't go through the third stage of operation, (as they use other materials for the radiation reflector). Their intended use was against tank formations in an armored invasion of Europe by the Soviet Union, and their effective range was about a kilometer.

The various outputs of nuclear bomb drop off at different distances.
And the size of the explosive determines the various effects. Neutron radiation is a short range effect. If you make the bomb too big, the blast effects will outweigh any prompt (neutron/x-ray/gamma) radiations.
This is largely because the blast energy comes from the prompt radiation being absorbed by the material nearby the bomb. Build a bigger neutron bomb, and you've built a bigger blast bomb.

<end pedant mode>

So if you try to build a neutron bomb big enough to kill only the people in a city, there won't be a city left.

And, to quote directly from this wikipedia link:

"It is said that to be a true cockney, you must have been born within earshot of the bells."

This is the commonly accepted definition of a cockney, and not unique to wikipedia.

The bells of the parish church of St Mary-le-Bow cannot be heard throughout the City of London, so there are true Londoners who were not born within earshot of the Bow Bells.

I shall refrain from childish insults, no matter how obvious and relevant.

But where was Cheney?

"It's always been clear to me that five years ago, when all those Republican guys got together and realized that George Bush could be elected president - and that he wasn't remotely capable - they came to an understanding: they would walk him through it. I'm sure it seemed like a swell idea, especially because it meant that they'd be in a perfect position to convince him to do all sorts of exciting things they had always wanted to do.

Cheney was the point man. Cheney was the guy they put on Meet the Press. Cheney was the person who seemed always to be the first responder. Cheney was the official they put into the bunker last May when a plane flew too close to the White House; Bush, who was bicycling in Maryland, wasn't even told about the episode until forty minutes after it was over. Even Laura Bush, who was in the bunker with Cheney, publicly questioned the decision to keep the President in the dark.

But if you look at the chart in Sunday's New York Times, which tells you who was where when Katrina struck, Cheney doesn't even get a listing. It's Bush, Chertoff, Brown. Bush I and Bill Clinton were summoned to help. But Cheney didn't even turn up back in Washington until last week, when he was sent off for a day of spouting platitudes while touring the flood zone.

Like the curious incident of the dog that didn't bark in the famous Sherlock Holmes story, Cheney's the missing person in this event, and one has to wonder why.

If he were a woman, I would guess he'd been busy recovering from a face-lift, but he's not. So I can only suppose that something has gone wrong. Could the President be irritated that Cheney helped con him into Iraq?
Oh, all right, probably not. Could Cheney - and not just his aides -- possibly be involved in the Valerie Plame episode? Is Cheney not speaking to Karl Rove? Does the airplane/bicycle incident figure into this in any way?
And how is it possible that the President is off on vacation and the Vice President is too? Not that it matters that much if the President is on vacation; on some level, the President is always on vacation. But where was Cheney?

Just asking.

It was taken down I see. It was perhaps 60 pictures taken by a resident of NO who documented the before and after Katrina. There's one picture of 8 cars parked in a row on the street with all their rear windows blown out. There's another showing an office building that looks like the Murra building after the McVeigh bombing.

...well, OK. I'll retract that statement about your brilliance. <grin> However, it seems you've committed the fatal flaw of commenting on a program you didn't see.

> I'm not sure what all was discussed in Powell's speech off-hand, which again tells me you did not see it.

> There was the issue at sponsorship and/or support for terrorist

Yes, this was the issue Powell addressed, and I think a rather important one.

Mr. Powell said that he had "never seen evidence to suggest" a connection between the September 11, 2001 terror attacks in the United States and the Saddam regime.

When the interviewer asked him the same question again, Mr. Powell repeated the same answer, very firmly "No terrorist connection, no 9/11 connection to Saddam.

> There was the issue of fostering democratic-styled govts for a brutally > oppressed populace in two rogue nations.

Well, first, let's keep this to Iraq, not "two nations" (although I did support blowing away the training camps in A-stan). Next, what I am about to say probably warrants a thread on its own, but briefly, why must we put in your "democratic-styled" government? Powell just settled the issue that there was no reason to invade Iraq, a sovereign nation, no reason to even be there. So why do we have so much hubris as to tell them what kind of government they have to have? What if they want a monarchy? An oligarchy? What if they want a tribal system like they've had for a millenia? Heaven forbid if they even wanted a dictator that would at least keep their warring factions under control and keep the electricity on. (And puh-leze, don't tell me about how many innocent Iraqi civilians Saddam killed; W is fast approaching or has already exceeded Saddam's number of innocent stiffs).

> There was the issue of removing two brutally oppressive regimes.

Very similar to your first statement above, but the answer is "Who put us in charge of removing any regimes, oppressive or not? We are not the policemen of the world. If we were, we sure as hell didn't care about Rwanda or Cambodia or Uncle Joe Stalin, all of whom counted for multi MILLIONS of deaths, waaay more than Saddam ever thought about. Where was Mister Policeman then? (rhetorical question-I know the answer)

I do not disagree with your statement "terrorists can't be bargained with...etc", but based on what Powell said, it is "self-evident" that your "war on terrorism" IN IRAQ is predicated on there having been an Iraq connection to terrorists or 9/11 and Powell clearly said there was NONE. Ergo, fighting the "war on terrorism" in Iraq is a clearly a sham.

(and, yes, to anticipate you, there clearly are terrorists in Iraq now, but they came in from other countries after we played right into Bin Laden's hands by destabilizing Iraq. The remainder of the people fighting us in Iraq are not terrorists but freedom fighters, defending their country from unwanted and unwarranted invaders, much like we were freedom fighters in 1776 or like we would be today if some moron invaded our country).

So now we've got a no-win situation; civil war and Middle eastern destabilization if we leave, our brave and innocent youth getting killed almost daily if we stay. Poppy Bush told us in his book exactly what would happen if we invaded Iraq. Guess what, he was right. Too bad Junior admits that he doesn't read. If he would have just looked at Poppy's book, he could have saved us the trouble.

You're not the first to think of that. It was, in fact, part of the premise of "Crack in The World." In a less direct sort of way. With cataclysmic results after a pocket of underground hydrogen magnifies the yield of the thermonuclear charge.

Time out from our regularly scheduled round of insults for what I think is a funny power outage story...

One of my friends, a big time Hallicrafters/Willys/pipe organ collector, ham and SWL, had a power failure a few years ago. He called the power company to report it but after several hours, they had yet to arrive.

So he calls again, says he has a question. He says he's got his ladder against the power pole, got his car jumper cables out, but just wants to know if it made any difference where he connected the red cable.

They were there in 5 minutes.

We now return you to our regularly scheduled insults...

Speaking of insults, you've been pretty stingy in handing them out lately. When will we see another "trifecta"... (or is the 8 Ball just needing a little rest?) ;-)

I don't think that will help. Replacement parts, especially the

Some of those buses will hold about 77 people,I think and more people if they are sitting or standing in the aisles of the buses.400 x amount of people are a lot of people and the buses could have made some round trips too.And there are/were the city transit buses and 18 wheeler trucks and trailers and other kinds of big vehicles too and all of those cars and pickup trucks and suv's.Anything on wheels that has some gas in the tanks that will run.Lots of cars and other vehicles at the new car dealers and used car dealers.Given enough time,they could have all (or most all of them) gotten far enough away.

Yes... Well... The topic (R8B) resulted in hundreds of posts... In my opinion, the receiver was never developed to its full potential. I've had mine since January, 1998 and I use it daily---it's on for 10 hours or more.
It needs to be re-aligned; it no longer zero beats WWV dead on like it did new, the passband offset is centered at 1:00 O'Clock and the notch drifts.
The receiver was never worth what Drake was asking. I think a proper purchase price would have been around $600 new.

Shame on you! There is no sport in it when you bait him like this.
You don't get to count coup for this one.

However, congratulations on the one he quoted. You actually elicited a

The psychic abilities are in addition to his new found hobby. The Ace seems to have adopted Caprophagia as a new dietary supplement. His addiction to the new 'insult' confirms it.

Thanks for all the nice replys to my post.

I am going to send it back to Drake and not whine about the price they charge me. I realize all of the costs involved to repair sophisticated gear. My comment about wishing I could make 100 bucks an hour in my basement was just that. I wish I could make 100 bucks an hour in my basement fixing radios. I would gladly leave the 9-5 behind me if I could work on this type of gear all day out of my house.

We do have a 'troll' problem. There's no doubt about it. I don't understand the whole process of creating and managing usenet newgroups very well. However, there are things that can be done about this problem, if people get sufficiently ticked off. It's sad to imagine this group as 'moderated', but who knows....maybe that's what it will take.

No, I'm saying, we don't call them "specially trained." We call them suspects, yank them off duty, and investigate them. Occasionally they actually face justice. The rest of the time, the elected officials feel our wrath.

They may not be normal Bobbies on the beat, but their "special training" has to go beyond ballroom dancing and proper behavior around the Royals. Like, how to handle a high-stress situation and not let the adrenaline cloud your judgement.

This KRBC refers to Kirby Road Baptist Church in Memphis.

The initiator of this thread (who is a fan of profit Stair) received a warm invitaton there a few years ago.

I'm sure the welcome is still open.

You'd need someone as the moderator. I'm to busy to but I doubt he'd want the job. Or the ng moderated, for

For a newsgroup to be moderated, it has to be done at the time the newsgroup is created. After it is in wide use there is no way to change it other than to create a new, moderated newsgroup. The other approach is for a lot of the users to report, and keep reporting the worst off topic users to their providers, till they lose their accounts. That takes a lot of time and a lot of people, but it is the way newsgroups are supposed to self police themselves. Of course, the offenders start screaming "NetKop" when it happens, but they are the ones creating the problem in the first place. I have written this group off as mostly useless. I don't think there is enough left to save.

Most people have real lives, responsibilities, and friends. You should feel sorry for someone who is so pitiful that he lives his entire life through this newsgroup, who cannot put together a coherent argument, and can only repeat the same potty-mouth potshots. He obviously does not have the courage to venture into a real political discussion where people would disagree with him, and he clearly does not even have the intellect to join a forum where the majority would agree with him. He may have a ham license, but he is probably a lid and an appliance operator who does not know which end of the soldering iron is hot.

Hmm. Yeah. I'd forgotten that, when our international friends need reassurance or general insight into America's political climate, the first and most natural place for them they look is rec.radio.shortwave. I keep lapsing back into the old belief that this is a hobbyist newsgroup, when of course its true purpose is to assuage the fears of our international friends, who are thoroughly dependent upon rec.radio.shortwave as their primary source of news and information.

In fact, given the vast geopolitical importance of rec.radio.shortwave, I wonder why you don't hear more about it in the 'mainstream' media, or why so few posts turn up here from major political figures. Weird.

*I think your becoming a bit silly now. Everyone at sometime makes a mistake.. thats why its so heavily publicised when it happens because its out of the ordinary. Ive seen film footage of an american police woman accidentally shooting a suspect while hes on the floor and being restrained and handcuffed without undue problems. Does this mean the american police all shoot the criminals when they are helpless on the floor? no.. it was an accident in the heat of the moment.. if you want the clip so you can see im not making it up i will find it for you..

You suffer the same problems in America so dont give me that. It was a one of rare occurance thats why it was so well publicised. He was taken down and shot because at the time it was genuinely thought he was a train bomber. If the police had held back or tried to arrest him as they would in any other circumstance other than a terrorist alert with the recent bombings making the police on "high" alert, and he had actually detonated a bomb you would be critical then also for not taking him down when they had the chance.
You have no time for negotiation or confrontation with these guys as they are prepaired to die and dont give a damn who they take with them... in fact the more the merrier... its not like dealing with your average criminal. The second they realise they have been discovered the bomb goes off...
It is a tragic cock up.. i agree.. but no way is it a common occurance.

Don't plan on rec.radio.shortwave.moderated ever happening. Moderate the newsgroup yourself. I've expanded my killfile considerably over the last few weeks.

You might want to do the same.

There was a great first person report on this weeks (September 13?, 2005) "Law Report" about the situation in NOLA.

An Australian lawyer, working for an anti-Death Penalty group in New Orleans described the situation there during and before the evacuation.

http://www.abc.net.au/rn/ and go to the Law Report where, (for the next few days), you can get streaming audio or a podcast. Or read the transcript when they get around to transcribing it.

Hi,

I was wondering if anyone has managed to use a PC, and one of the receivers in the subject title, to sucessfully decode DRM transmissions on Shortwave?

If it has been done, I'd be grateful if you could give me advice on how to achieve this.

TIA.

I often wish that someone would write a newsgroup reader that would let you filter what you want to SEE, not what you DON'T.
It would take up MUCH less resources to specify what words in the title will pass and who you want to see messages from...

It is your words and your implicit indictment that I quoted above.
You said that he "was so innocent his address was found..." not the police, not anyone else. YOU.

Now, either the police screwed up, or this is English Justice and that's just okay. One or 'tother.

Now, I'm working on the assumption that they screwed up. Fine. What I'm saying is that this so-called "special training" (your phrase again) they got isn't up to the job. Some random Bobby may not carry a gun, but those who do -- and are authorized to use force to potentially preempt a terrorist act -- DAMNED WELL BETTER BE TRAINED IN HOW TO MAKE A SNAP DECISION UNDER STRESS.

Your "special training" isn't worth shit.

The Superadio II hasn't been produced in 20+ years and is well sought after by Superadio collectors. A mint one in the box will command good money. Not unusual for a nice Superadio I without box to sell in the $200+ range on Ebay now and then.

I have an SW-07, and it is an excellent radio -- probably the best there is for a miniaturized "traveling" set.

The SW100's had a reputation for wearing out the ribbon cable on the clamshell hinge apparatus. The SW07's don't have that problem.

Why do so many more expensive Shortwave Radios nowdays have so many digital led front panels (and some people want a blue led front panel instead of the green front led panel (or vicer versa) the radios came from the factory with) and those little bitty push buttons and computerized interface chips and so much software that must be used with or without computers.Why can't a company or companies design and manufacture Shotwaves Radios similar to the Shortwave Radios of the 1940's and 1950's at least in style? Radios that are pure Shortwave and no AM/FM/and that other stuff (bells and whistles) that most people wouldn't hardly ever use or care about anyway.Why is it that nowdays,two bits worth of plastic (plastic cases that will melt in a car in the hot sun) radio cases for radios every year or so in a new style like womens new dresses and shoes) has to be designed and put on the market when actually it is the same o same o two bits worth of cheap plastic,do they really think they are buying a better radio? Ooooo,, that new radio looks soooo neat!,I must buy it because it looks different than my last years radio even though it is the same o same o!

The EPA mystery man says the toxins pose a more severe hazard, like the Pile after 9-11, where the Agency also lied about the relative safety.

This is from todays Austin Statesman, page 1; "Austin medics in New Orleans say disorganization, lack of communication hindered response" http://www.statesman.com/news/content/auto/epaper/editions/wednesday/news_3472ece4b3b0322000c0.html
"Members of the Austin response team say they experienced other problems. Rescuers in boats plucking people from rooftops had no way to talk directly to helicopter pilots to tell them where to pick up evacuees. Initially, Austin medics also had no way of talking to state police to ask them to clear blocked roads for ambulances.

At one point, Bergh said, he and other frustrated Austin officials drove to a Federal Emergency Management Agency command post on the outskirts of New Orleans and offered to link themselves to the agency's communication system.

Bergh and two other high-ranking Austin emergency workers said federal officials refused to surrender their frequencies, citing security.

"This was a time to serve the community, and your strength is in the ability to cooperate and communicate," Bergh said.

FEMA officials have acknowledged that their response to the disaster was hindered by an inability to communicate. The storm toppled cell-phone and broadcast towers, though Bergh said groups could have still communicated with each other and FEMA by radio had authorities provided them the same frequencies.

A FEMA spokesman said this week that without names of specific agency representatives Bergh and his group spoke with, he could not comment on why they might have refused access to their frequencies."

Opinion? Where do you see opinion? This is eyewitness testimony.

''Hugh Kauffman, a Senior Policy Analyst at the Environmental Protection Agency who specializes in emergency response, told Morning Sedition hosts Marc Maron and Mark Riley that a government cover-up is taking place right now, as we speak, to hide information about the dangerous toxins in the flood waters of the Gulf Coast region.
Kauffman, a 35-year EPA veteran who has served in Republican and Democratic administrations, says that the Bush administration is preventing the EPA from releasing information that oil and chemical companies are mandated by law to provide. Kauffman says the Bush administrationï¿½s cover-up is endangering residents and relief workers throughout the Gulf Coast region, who are being exposed to dangerous levels of toxins, some of which have been proven to cause cancer and birth defects. Kauffman, who was the chief investigator for the 9/11 clean up, also said that the Bush administration engaged in the same practice after 9/11ï¿½covering up the truth about the dangers in the air

Kauffman said that over 75% of the heroes who responded to 9/11 have gotten sick and in some cases have died because of exposure to toxins at Ground Zero, and that he fears a similar fate will befall relief workers and residents in the Gulf Coast now.''

As I understand it, the Governor retains control of civilian law

No sane governor would say no to federal disaster relief.

Chertoff is a bigger idiot than Bush or Brown. Apparently the only people in the Executive Branch following events were Bush's staff and they were afraid to tell him how bad it was.

I just received a part (speaker) for my YB 400 from Act Electronics.
This is the repair location listed on Etons site. After some initial issues the part arrived fine. I am posting to make people aware of the policies of this shop. Stamped on the receipt was the following;
"ALL PARTS AND ACCESSORIES SALES FINAL NO RETURN OR EXCHANGES"
As well as;
"All orders cancelled by customer are subject to a 50% charge of the total amaount"
I waited 2 weeks for my order before I called them & was told that I must be confused & ordered from someone else! The man that I had ordered from said that I was undecided & didn't order anything. When I mentioned that he had taken my CC number & address & quoted some of his comments, he foung the order. He said that it would be mailed the next day. That was Wednesday the 7th., my card was charged as soon as I hung up, the package was mailed on the 12th.
Needless to say, I am reluctant to order from them again. Anyone know

As far as I know, you can send the messages to any folder you want, depending on the filters you specify. Nothing says everything you filter HAS to go to the garbage can.

That's the way with most civilized newsreaders/email agents. I don't know about Outlook or Outlook Express, as they are virus magnets.
Mozilla or Netscape are fine in this regard.

Go to Tools, Message filters to specify.

Oh, I only noticed your post after reposting my request...

Very good rendition at 56 kbs, but have you tried other compression formats:
-- AAC (56 to 16 kbs)
-- MP3+VBR (? to experiment on compressibility)
-- Ogg-Vorbis, for Wikipedia Media submission

When [and where] not to use the Bow Bells Indent: On PAL TVs with NICAM Stereo...
-- TVNZ has the most excellent implementation of NICAM, with HDTV (DVB-T) still being years away.
-- I wish Canada implemented NICAM Stereo, separate from the US BSTC (totally sonically horrid)...

Does this individual contribute anything useful that is ON TOPIC to the group? Just curious, as all I ever see are hundreds of "OT" posts by ?him?. If all he ever contributes are these "OT" postings, then his posts are going to be dumped in the kill-file.

No offence to him or anything, I'm sure what he posts is interesting to some; I'd just prefer to view the on topic stuff myself... And don't bother to write suggesting I filter out the "OT", as OE is "stupid", and will filter out anything that contains those two characters in that series, so it's not an option...

3623. How dense can they all be?

I keep hearing on the news about the massive failure in communications after Katrina (and they're also talking about the same thing after 9/11).

My question is... are these people completely clueless? Don't they have engineers that they can talk to?

In the case of 9/11, where were the repeaters for the fire/police/etc? On top of the WTC towers... and those lost power when the planes hit (at least the upper floors), ergo, no comms. And they certainly weren't working after the towers fell.

Now, I may be in error about the location of their repeaters, these may have been elsewhere (the only other real choice would be the Empire State Building), but again, walkie talkies don't work well inside of concrete buildings.. range would be spotty at best.

They're talking about needing more spectrum for comms. Under those conditions, no amount of additional spectrum space would make a whit of difference.

This goes double or more for New Orleans. They could have all the spectrum space in the world, but if the infrastructure to run it (electrical power, antenna systems, etc.) is destroyed, it would avail them not at all. One of the problems with UHF and VHF two way communications is that the antennas need to be as high as possible, which makes them prime targets for hurricane force winds. There are locat tactical frequencies that allow on scene personnel to talk to one another, but those are very limited in range, and furthermore the chargers for those handie talkies are sitting back at the station which has no power, or limited time on generator power. Maybe satellite coms are the answer, get away from terrestrial linkups that are more fallible. And you can stuff a lot of PS comms on a single 72MHz wide Ku band transponder.

So much for my little rant.. I just can't believe they're griping about the government not doing enough to insure comms during an emergency, when in some emergencies, such as a hurricane, tornado, or terrorist bombing, the comms infrastructure may be the first thing to go, and there's not a hell of a lot you can do about it.

3625. Sticky meter on Sony ICF 6700 receiver

I have an old Sony ICF 6700 receiver which works OK except that the signal meter has become "sticky" - it moves very sluggishly and only seems to cover the middle of the range. Even when switched off.

I suppose the meter bearings need cleaning and lubricating, but they would be quite tricky to get at.

Has anyone attempted this? I'd be grateful for any comments.

Many thanks

They simply aren't thinking, really. After all, hams were supposed to be obsolete, but guess what? They could still operate when other forms of communication failed.

From what I've been reading, NO and that area's comms were bottom of the barrel to begin with, and it didn't take much to make it nonexistent. Having seen the arguments about upgrading county-wide communications locally (the county went to a digital trunked system 2 years ago, and the City of Cincinnati followed suit this year), I can see where it would become a political football:
comms wouldn't stand a chance against items like elderly services or schools or police or fire.
Worse yet, if it's brought to the voters as an tax levy option, the levy will probably fail without extensive education of the voters. (It did here, several times in a row, before the county got the hint and budgeted for it.)

What I'm happy about is the fact that hams responded when needed, and operated in an efficient manner (I listened for a couple of days while I was working).

In emergencies,They could use Airplanes that have communicating equipment or Blimps.In World War Two,some of the Swiss people used big balloons that had their antennas mounted onto the balloons. (or maybe the lines were the antennas) I don't remember if they used helium or hydrogen to get the balloons up into the air.They had the lines of the balloons attached to big wooden homemade reels.They would let the balloons go up into the air and when they were through doing their transmitting or receiving of broadcast,they would reel the balloons back down.I read about that in a Saga or Bluebook for Men or a True magazine (I don't remember which magazine it was) back in the 1950's so I might not have all of the details of the article in the magazine exactly right.It has been about 55 years ago since I read that article in the magazine.

Yahoo is a Communist organization:

MONTREAL, Sept. 7 /CNW Telbec/ - The text of the verdict in the case of journalist Shi Tao - sentenced in April to 10 years in prison for "divulging state secrets abroad" - shows that Yahoo! Holdings (Hong Kong) Ltd. provided China's state security authorities with details that helped to identify and convict him, Reporters Without Borders said today.
"We already knew that Yahoo! collaborates enthusiastically with
the Chinese regime in questions of censorship, and now we know it is a Chinese
police informant as well," the press freedom organisation said.
"Yahoo! obviously complied with requests from the Chinese authorities to furnish information regarding an IP address that linked Shi Tao to materials posted online, and the company will yet again simply state that they just conform to the laws of the countries in which they operate," the organisation said. "But does the fact that this corporation operates under Chinese law free
it from all ethical considerations? How far will it go to please Beijing?" Reporters Without Borders added: "Information supplied by Yahoo!
led to the conviction of a good journalist who has paid dearly for trying to get the news out. It is one thing to turn a blind eye to the Chinese government's abuses and it is quite another thing to collaborate." Translated into English by the Dui Hua Foundation (which works to document the cases of Chinese political prisoners), the verdict reveals that Yahoo! Holdings (Hong Kong) Ltd. provided the Chinese investigating organs with detailed information that apparently enabled them to link Shi's personal e-mail account (huoyan-1989@yahoo.com.cn) and the specific message containing information treated as a "state secret" to the IP address of his computer.

Yahoo ! Holdings (Hong Kong) is subject to Hong Kong legislation, which does not spell out the responsibilities in this kind of situation of companies that provide e-mail services. Nonetheless, it is reportedly customary for email service and Internet access providers to transmit information to the police about their clients when shown a court order.
Tests carried out by Reporters Without Borders seem to indicate that the servers used for the Yahoo.com.cn e-mail service, from which the information about Shi was extracted, are located on the Chinese mainland.

Shi Tao

Aged 37, Shi worked for the daily Dangdai Shang Bao (Contemporary Business News). He was convicted on 30 April of sending foreign-based websites the text of an internal message which the authorities had sent to his newspaper warning journalists of the dangers of social destabilisation and risks resulting from the return of certain dissidents on the 15th anniversary of the Tiananmen Square massacre.
Chinese state security insisted during the trial that the message was "Jue Mi" (top secret). Shi admitted sending it out by e-mail but disputed that it was a secret document. He is still being held in a prison in Changsha to which he was sent after his arrest in the northeastern city of Taiyuan on 24 November 2004.

Yahoo! and Chinese censorship

For years Yahoo! has allowed the Chinese version of its search engine to be censored. In 2002, Yahoo! voluntarily signed the "Public Pledge on Self-Discipline for the China Internet Industry", agreeing to abide by PRC censorship regulations. Searches deemed sensitive by the Chinese authorities such as "Taiwan independence" in Chinese into the Yahoo! China search engine,

retrieve only a limited and approved set of results.
A US-based multinational, Yahoo! Appears to be willing to go to any lengths to gain shares of the Chinese market and it is investing heavily in local companies. In 2003, it spent 120 million dollars to buy the search engine 3721.com. More recently Yahoo! acquired a large stake in the Internet
giant Alibaba in an operation that reportedly cost nearly a billion dollars.
Reporters Without Borders has written several times to Yahoo!
executives in an attempt to alert it to the ethical issues raised by its Chinese investments.
These letters have so far received no answer.

Tom,

Thank you very much for your helpful reply.

I think it makes sense to buy a cheap ATS909 from ebay rather than a brand new one at twice the cost. The modifications will invalidate the warranty anyway on a brand new unit anyway.

Does it appear to be a mechanical problem - i.e. sticky operation as opposed to diminshed sensitivity?

Had a mechanical problem with the signal meter sticking at maximum on a Sony ICF-5900W. Solution was to work a tiny amount of watch oil into the two bearing surfaces and reset the bearing tension.

Good post thanks. Yes there are several interesting shortwave listening and equipment groups on Yahoo. In addition to those on your extensive list there are several devoted to specific receivers:
Kenwood R5000, Gundid, Degen, Tecsun, etc., etc.

And the discussions are for the most part focused on the hobby!

HI there Brenda,

Sounds like you're trying to come up with some technical excuses for the people running the show. You see, BECAUSE of 911, we were supposed to be well learnt from that experience as it was both horrible in the way it happened and the way and amount of people that died in it. We were supposed to not let those people die in vain and not allow it to happen again in the future.

So, bush and administration preached to us, spent BILLIONS on fighting terror and something called "Homeland Security" or whatever you want to call it to keep us all from harm. Well, he's had like 5+ years to do something to defend us from terror.

One of those things was to make sure the one VITAL thing, our communications structure was now protected from terrorists and thus not go down from simple bombs. So, you could analogize the affects of Katrina to a bomb's affects. People complained that their walkie talkies didn't work in the buildings from 911. This was now a well known thing. Our military also knows how important communications are during a major event or war. We all know how important they are to us.

So kids, had Katrina been a real terrorist incident where several dirty bombs went off all over New Orleans and/or the state, it would have took our gov't 5 days to get there with any aid. Can you just imagine if there was radiation levels to worry about? How could they handle that if they couldn't handle a weather event?

How about the communications? TOTALLY COLLAPSED. Some of these poor emergency workers and honest policemen either died or couldn't get emergency calls to them so they could organize again. You would think after all these billions of dollars and speeches of protecting us from "terror", and all the men and women who died in Iraq to fight terrorism, we would have had someone other then an ex horse breeder running FEMA.

Oh yeah he took the hit and got fired {opps I meant resign} And how about the other dipshit who's running Homeland Security Chertoff?

He said on national TV news that he didn't know people were trapped and starving in the Superdome and the harrassing of good people by some gangs. He said that on the Thursday of the hurricane weeks event that happened 5 days earlier. I think every single person in the country knew about the Superdome crisis on Mon-Tuesday but the head of Homeland Security didn't know?? A liar and a bigot instead of a true knucklehead?? Take your pick. Hey, perhaps both!

You make a good point Brenda and a point well taken by me. BUT, after we experienced 911, spent billions on terror, heard countless speeches on terror, sent people to die in Iraq, I think the American people expected to be more protected and high tech then what we got.

The communications problems should have ben fixed nationally in the 2 terms bush had and is having. Katrina showed the world, the American people and the terrorists just how inept this present adminstration is and how easy it would be to bring us down.

The sad, sad part of all this is that it's true.

G-D help us in a major event *IF it ever happens cause we'll need the help for sure.

Lucky

Not exactly hidden or being covered up. Every newspaper, newscast and radio broadcast I've had contact with has had something on the noxious soup of stuff that is in the streets, houses and bodies of water of New Orleans. It is one of many many problems to be addressed as the recover effort moves along. Directly related to the problem of what to do about pollution is the question of where New Orleand will get a supply of potable water that will allow this Crescent City rebirth the politicians are now talking about.

Good joke!! The Tradeport Warehouse ebay store only sells completely non-functional S350 radios.

EXCELLENT for spare parts maybe!

At $75.00 I would opt for a fully warranted new one from Radio Shack for $99.00.

Factory refurbs and shelf models are only ok if you can get them for 75% of retail.

It's a matter of downplaying how dangerous it is.

The EPA said the WTC was safe when it was not. People from Lower Manhattan are getting sick. Rescue workers from the Pile are getting sick.

The military has specially equipped C-130s that can stay aloft for long periods of time over an incident. They can broadcast TV, FM and provide 2-way repeater service.

In hindsight,the people that were trapped in New Orleans BEFORE the storm (Katrina) could have walked (given enough time/early warning) across either of the bridges South (seeee,I told y'all before South is always best) just across the Mississippi River fom New Orleans.Any cops shooting in the air trying to turn them back,why H..L!,Rush the crooked cops and throw them in the Big Muddy! (Mississippi River) New Orleans should post information with big purty maps all over New Orleans,EVERYWHERE FOREVER ALL over New Orleans of the greater New Orleans metro areas that did not flood.

They have them little Pilotless Airplane thingys too.There is a company in Starkville,Mississippi (somewhere wayyyyyyy up North in Mississippi) that makes some of them and also Eurocopters (something about outfitting them with electronics and stuff and over there near Meridian,Lockheed Martin manufactures parts for Air Force Aircraft and Northrup Grumman in Pascagoula builds Nuclear Ships and Submarines and also non nuclear Ships.I don't know what all is manufactured in Mississippi nowdays.Nissan has a factory just off the Gluckstat exit between Jackson and Canton,there is talk that there might a Kia factory,the old Vickers (Vickers merged with another company,I don't know what name they call themselves nowdays) hydraulics factory in Jackson,every commercial Airplane and Military Airplane you ever flown in has at least one hydraulic pump or motor or valve in it) We have stuff on the Moon and Mars.I can't keep up with everything.Po old Mississippi is changing.MFJ is in Mississippi.I think Mississippi is changing too much,too fast.

5,000 hours staying aloft up in the air is just about tops for Jet Aircraft.Otherwise,the lube oil starts congealing too much.Diesel Locomotives Engines must be fired up and run for a while every few days whether they are going anywhere or not so as to "burn off" the moisture in the air that gets into the coils.

For the most part I agree, although I do find it useful on the R-5000 when using the RF gain on a fading signal. If you ever wish to ressurect the "S" meter on that Toshiba it should not be that difficult. The Toshiba has me thinking. Didn't Kenwood issue a re-badged RF-P11? That Toshiba got good ratings in MT when originally released.

I've got one of thes D1875 receivers too, but mine came from a Best Products store. Nice audio, much better than the Sony 7601 that came out about the same time. Did you find the "hidden" band yet?

Sure - an email address and password is about it for most of them. It really is an unusual atmosphere though because there is little flaming and people stay on topic. The groups are pretty much self policing although there is a moderator/owner for each.

I kill filed him the first day on the group when I saw hundreds of nonsense posts, right after subscribing to the newsgroup. With him and a few others kill filed, I see a couple hundred headers to download when I open this newsgroup and well over half disappear into the filters.
Sometimes over 80% of the messages are trapped, leaving only a few on topic messages, and replies to those in the filters.

Me too,if I wanted to buy a new Grundig radio,I would step over to the Radio Shack store (after first stopping off at the food court and flirtin with them gals www.metromalljackson.com) and buy the Grundig radio of my choice (and back over to the food court and impress the gals with my "Grundig") and if I didn't like that Grundig radio,I would (after the food court thingy again) take it back to the Radio Shack store for a full refund and stop off at the food court again.

BS.

A Louisiana lawmaker diverted National Guard resources and held up rescue operations for hours during Hurricane Katrina's aftermath - all so he could retrieve his personal possessions. ABC News reports that six soldiers escorted Democratic Representative William Jefferson (search) to his New Orleans home in a five-ton truck on September 2, pulling up to the front door so the congressman wouldn't get his feet wet.
That led to the truck getting stuck in the mud and troops had to signal a Coast Guard helicopter to rescue Jefferson and his belongings. But Jefferson refused to get in the chopper leaving it hovering overhead for 45 minutes. Guardsmen finally called a second truck to rescue the first one and to carry Jefferson and his belongings to safety.

The Washington Post has corrected a story on September 4 that quoted a White House official as saying Louisiana Governor Kathleen Blanco (search) had yet to declare a state of emergency five days after Hurricane Katrina made landfall. Blanco made that declaration on August 26, two days before the storm hit the state, leaving some to wonder why no federal troops were dispatched at the time. But in fact, the federal troops were not sent because Blanco had not asked for them, as the law requires.
the Wednesday after the storm, Blanco was caught on tape telling her press secretary, "I really need to call for the military. I should have started that in the first call."

I'm essentially wanting to buy a Super ATS 909. I have a lot of experience with the Sangean ATS 909, as I've owned a DX-398, a 909, and with these enhancements, I think I'd prefer this to the artificially large Grundig.

Anyone who'd be interested, please send me an email:

dmorlan<at>sbcglobal<dot>net

Radio is only a few months old, purchased at amazon.com.

I'm asking $400 O.B.O. Thought I'd check with you guys first. If interested in using paypal, please inquire.

(I'll of course, include pics and everything)

73, WW6DJM

[If there's any among this group who would find this venture to be a spectacular downgrade, please email me personally, and explain.]

A Louisiana lawmaker diverted National Guard resources and held up rescue operations for hours during Hurricane Katrina's aftermath - all so he could retrieve his personal possessions. ABC News reports that six soldiers escorted Democratic Representative William Jefferson (search) to his New Orleans home in a five-ton truck on September 2, pulling up to the front door so the congressman wouldn't get his feet wet.
That led to the truck getting stuck in the mud and troops had to signal a Coast Guard helicopter to rescue Jefferson and his belongings. But Jefferson refused to get in the chopper leaving it hovering overhead for 45 minutes. Guardsmen finally called a second truck to rescue the first one and to carry Jefferson and his belongings to safety.

The Washington Post has corrected a story on September 4 that quoted a White House official as saying Louisiana Governor Kathleen Blanco (search) had yet to declare a state of emergency five days after Hurricane Katrina made landfall. Blanco made that declaration on August 26, two days before the storm hit the state, leaving some to wonder why no federal troops were dispatched at the time. But in fact, the federal troops were not sent because Blanco had not asked for them, as the law requires.
On the Wednesday after the storm, Blanco was caught on tape telling her press secretary, "I really need to call for the military. I should have started that in the first call."

On the D1875 just slide the bandswitch one more position to the right past the last band marked on the dial. The band spread display on the back of the radio shows it. Daytime you might catch a station or two.

So it must be like doom... they should report the toxicity on a scale from 1-10.

Or like you they could report it something like: "it's bad for you" or "it's really bad for you" or it's really, really bad for you", etc., etc.

Actually I have heard that remark before and at the time it was NOT a racial comment but rather a comment in regards to kids in general.

Yes it was. That was the main selling point of the gummint to the

The point is not whether there is any benefit, the point is that it

Yes, I do see the strategic significance (along with Perkins, author of "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man) and have so stated in several of my previous posts. Unfortunately, we the American people were told a lie as to why we are there, not the real reasons. Had the people been told the truth and agreed to the war, then so be it. But don't try and chump

Agreed, but being in the wrong country (Iraq) for the wrong reason has nothing to do with reducing global terrorism. We are just adding fuel to the fire, playing right into Osama's hands and pissing off a lot of Muslims worldwide that otherwise would have had no ax to grind with us.

detail: it's their country. Looks like yet more big time arrogance to me.

...and tell me why democracy would mitigate terrorism more than a Humph! They are? Still don't see those flowers.

Well, actually, I have. I grew up in Dearborn, MI, Henry Ford's home town and also home to the largest Arabic population center in the U.S.
(thanks to Henry the First back in the 1930s). I occasionally have coffee with a few of my Arabic acquaintances there, some first generation and some recently off the boat, but all with relatives still in the old country. Most of those I have spoken with do not think this was the brightest move the U.S. ever made.

Naive how? There are "opportunistic terrorists" from other countries in Iraq, taking advantage of the situation after the war started.
(Remember? Powell said no terrorist connections before the war)

There are what could be considered "freedom fighters" for lack of a better term.

Those certainly are two of the major "categories" of groups in Iraq blowing us up, not to say that there could not be others.

You appear to be implying that the war, although illegal and a sham, is "OK" because "not very many people have been killed" (and like others here, conveniently ignoring the additional 15,000 maimed). Sorry, but I find that unconscionable. I don't believe that the number of people killed has anything to do with making a "wrong" war "right".

>>Poppy Bush told us in his book exactly what >>would happen if we invaded Iraq. Guess what, he was right. Too bad >>Junior admits that he doesn't read. If he would have just looked at >>Poppy's book, he could have saved us the trouble.

> You haven't looked into the successes in Iraq, have you?

Really? What successes? Tens of thousands of innocent Iraqi civilians dead? Children maimed? No electricity? No water? No medicine? No gas?
75% percent of many cities turned to rubble? Almost daily bombings? And all this for what the Iraqis (and a lot of the world) consider an unjust and illegal invasion. You certainly seem to have an odd definition of "success". Sorry, but I'm still waiting for them to start throwing flowers...

To summarize:

1)The American citizens were rightly angered and rightly wanted revenge for 9/11.

2)The American citizens were told by their gummint that Iraq was responsible (unfortunately overlooking the inconvenient fact that 15 of the 19 mad dogs of 9/11 were Saudis and zero were from Iraq).

3)Based on this, America sent their youth off to war.

4)Two years later, Colin Powell, a very high level government official and point man for the war, 'fessed up and said THERE WAS NO IRAQ INVOLVEMENT with 9/11.

5)Bottom line: The gummint shamelessly pandered to American patriotism and desire for revenge based on bare-faced lies.

I can't make it any plainer than that. We will just have to agree to disagree...

Hiya, Bob

I liked SeaTTY a lot for NAVTEX. I never went further then the trial version though. Currently, I use the Bonito RadioCom software that my Icom PCR-1000 came with to do decoding of NAXTEX. If you like decoding NAVTEX, I bet you'd love decoding weather fax images too if you havent already done so. I like to use WXSat for that.

I don't remember how much money it amounted to (about two hundred million dollars,I think,but I could be way off on that) but about a year or so ago,Mississippi spent a lot of money for some new technology so that the Police and Sheriff's Department's radio communications will work seameslessly together.The technology is for in case of bad weather such as "Katrinas" and it helps communication in evacuating people down South to further up North in Mississippi.It used to be that the Police and Sheriff's Department's had their own seperate radio communications systems and communicating between one and the other was sort of difficult and created confusion between the Departments.Mississippi spent that money very wisely.

Will be posting an Icom R71 receiver on ebay next week and putting it here first for anyone interested. Mint condition, voice unit, remote control, etc. Fantastic radio. Only selling because I want a new toy, and just got an R75 a year ago and hardly turn this on anymore. I would like to get $400 for it, but all serious offers considered. Feel free to check my 100% ebay feedback, where I have sold quite a few radios and accessories - username 'ckgoegging' - and post here with valid email for further specifications, etc.

Thanks!

Our national interests are rooted in amny many countries, espcially Saudi Arabia. If national interest was of the only measure for invading, then we'd pretty much have free reign to inavde anywhere in the world.

So we often use a different yardstick. It's called self defense. That's where that whole argument for the Iraq war was because they were in immediate threat to us. So, take away the immediate danger, and the fact that Iraq hadn't attacked our country, and the whole self-defense thing falls apart. Then the whole reason for invading just comes down to Bush's ego and the administrations desire for military bases in the region after Saudi Arabia kicked us out. Try selling that to the public and you'd have no support for what amounts to be a heap of spinach on your plate that you don't want to eat. So you have to wrap the spinach up in something that wets the appetite and let's it go down thre throat more easily, and that's wrapping it in the American flag.

Sickening.

The results are proof. No WMD found.

More importantly, no one appears to be loking for them if they were moved. Doesn't that amaze you? Bush says how dangerous they are, and then they aren't there so they either were destroyed or moved. If they were moved they are still a great danger and we should be willing to get them from whatever country has them. But are we? No! Proof that WMD do not mean anything.

No WMD. Do not care about WMD after the war. Seems like somebody was lying about the reasons for war and I for sure would put it in the administrations lap since they have "forgotten" about the WMD.

For me today 131 killed and 44 unread so out of 175 posts that 25% to read and 75% killed right off. That's not the whole story as there are still off topic posts in the 44 unread group. Pretty poor result.

One of Rock and Roll's all time great groups just released this. It's great. It's on the new 'A bigger bang' album

"You call yourself a Christian
I think that you're a hypocrite.
You say you are a Patriot
I think you are a crock of shit.
And listen, I love gasoline
I drink it every day
But it's getting very pricey
And who is gonna pay?

How come you're so wrong
My sweet neo-con?

It's getting very scary
Yes I'm frightened out my wits
There's bombers in my bedroom
And it's giving me the shits.
We must have loads more bases
To protect us from our foes.
Who needs these foolish friendships?
We're going it alone.

It's liberty for all Democracy's our style.
Unless you are against us
Then it's prison without trial.
But one thing that is certain Life is good at Halliburton.
If you're really so astute
You should invest in Brown and Root.

How come you're so wrong
My sweet neo-con?
Where's the money gone?
In the Pentagon.
Yeh yeh yeh.

How come you're so wrong
My sweet neo-con?
If you turn out right
I'll eat my hat tonight."

Had to be Hydrogen (or Hot air) The USA had the sole sources of Comercail Helium and we would not seel it much abroad after all it was clear airship were going to be vital in the next big war The result was of Hidenburg burned because it used Hydrogen

Well, not yet anyway. There is a lot of "saber rattling" over Iran and Syria. You may yet see that WMD excuse dusted off and used once again. Remember, "it ain't over 'til it's over".

R-75 handles a bit easier than R-71. Audio is more pleasant. And it tends to be a bit quieter in the headphones.

R-71, by receiver standards, is very long in the tooth, and though it still acqits itself well, it's nowhere near current, technically speaking, and is easily outperformed in deep DX by younger models. And by now, is beginning to show it's frailties.

Yes, I listen to it much more simply because it has more bells and whistles to play with and the memory (I use all 100) is so very well organized.

All of the above. The sync, passband tuning, DSP, alpha tags, memory allocations, audio in headphones (sweet).

I have three - the R71, R75, Grundig Sat 800, and Yaseu FRG100B. Out of the four I own, I opted to sell the R71 in order to buy a new scanner (396T), only because it is the one I use less than any other.

The FRG100B is a nice little radio once you get the after-market keypad for direct entry. But I still think the R75 has it beat in so many areas.

One time when I was in New Orleans, (whenever I traveled anywhere in my van,I always slept in my van and I always took one of my bicycles with me too) I had forgotten where I had parked that old no good piece of junk bicycle I had fished out of a local Jackson scrap metal yard.(the scrap metal yard on Beatty Street in beautifull down town Jackson,I found a front wheel for the bicycle,but it wasen't the right size wheel,too small,it didn't matter to me anyway,it worked d..n good!) The next day,after I had partied in the French Quarter,I went walking and looking for my old trashy bicycle.I finally found that piece of junk bicycle of mine.It was right there leaning agains't a pole in the area of that big tall building near the Mississippi River,that big tall building that has that flat looking top piece on the building that is offset at an angle on top of the building.My old bicycle was sooooo crappy (I hadn't bothered to lock the bicycle with a piece of chain and a padlock either) that nobody wanted to steal it.Another time when I was in New Orleans,I owned a very nice bicycle and I had chain locked it to that bicycle rack thingy just inside of Riverwalk Mall in New Orleans,right there on the Mississippi River.About three hours later as I was exiting the Mall and going to my very nice bicycle,my very nice bicycle was gone!

Sadly, I will probably be selling one of mine, the R71A probably to buy a digital scanner as more and more local PS agencies are going that way..

I'll keep my JRC NRD-515 forever, the 525 until I really get desperate for cash for something.

Agree, very nice and it would be a great radio for when you are way out in the middle of nowhere with an emergency. You can always contact a plane flying over to relay your position and situation to local authorities and not have to rely on a Ham 2 meter repeater being nearby. Very cool radio and nice size and battery life too.

"Leadership isn't a speech or a toll-free number. Leadership is getting the job done. No American doubts that New Orleans will rise again, they doubt the competence and commitment of this Administration. Weeks after Katrina, Americans want an end to politics-as-usual that leaves them dangerously and unforgivably unprepared. Americans want to know that their government will be there when it counts with leadership that keeps them safe, not speeches in the aftermath to explain away the inexcusable."

Translation: I was told to say something and this is the only crap I could come up with. Of course had I been President when this tragedy struck I would have had a plan, but since I'm not the President I can't tell you what that plan might have been so I'll just continue to flap my jaws in a meaningless manner.

Just wanted to let everyone know that I have found out that the transmitter site for WRNO SHORTWAVE near New Orleans for the most part did not suffer any serious damage due to hurricane Katrina. The xmtr building had no flooding, and the antenna, and transmission line did not suffer any wind damage. The only real problem is an Oak tree that has fallen, and has cut electrical power to the building. It may be sometime before the tree can be removed, and the station hopes to get on the air by late October.

Move the bandswitch past the 13m band, to the area marked "LIN". It actually covers the 25m band.

Agreed, the Stones have been overrated. In their earlier years, they had some good numbers, but there was plenty of bad to go with it.

Hmm, now here's something different and well worth a listen (truly):

http://www.crookedstill.com/CS/5/music.html
http://cdbaby.com/cd/crookedstill

Mike Harding of the BBC raves, "Absolutely wonderful! Not a weak track on the entire album...I've played it over and over again." Even some Irish influence to be heard, so perhaps Cuhulin, too, might go for this.

For some reason international buyers on Ebay really want these radios and pay good money. I suggest putting it on Ebay and offering it internationally. You'll probably get $400+ for it there.

If you sell it internationally, make sure the buyer has a Paypal verified address. If not, selling internationally via Paypal is very risky.

I usually tape it for an hour in the morning. Listening to the tape, 9740 was down in the mud at 14:30, improving to 15:00, and resasonable quality by 15:30.

Getting a bit ahead of myself here, but expect to purchase one or more PC software programs to attempt to decode NAVTEX, which I'm told is at 518 KC

Have a JRC 545.

What mode do I want to set it to ?

Same question for receiving the marine weather fax maps ?

I just repaired (yet another) Sony SW-1 with defective caps in the audio circuit.
All well in that regard.
On power up I have noticed that the unit is displaying frequencies 10khz low from the actually frequency.

EG: Local station on 1070 is displaying (or receiving) on 1060khz.

Any ideas ladies and gents?

Many thanks -

Colin

Nice to hear someone sing the praises once again of the 515 -- it's almost always a keeper in a collection.

On the 71A, I struggled for some time but ended up selling one I had -- it just didn't have either the audio or the ease of use that others had. Kept the FRG100 because I just love to use it (and its looks).
And I have found the Kenwood R-5000 to be a superb receiver.
